ANTISALOON LEAGUE AUDIT TO BE MADE AT WESTERVILLE, O.

Senate Committee Acts Despite Protest of Wheeler

CONTRIBUTORS' NAMES TO BE MADE PUBLIC

Stayton, Wet Leader, Will Be Examined; May Investigate Ku Klux Klan.

By ALBERT W. FOX.

Disregarding alternative suggestions by Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel for the Antisaloon league, the Senate special committee yesterday decided to send an accountant to go over the league's books at Westerville, Ohio. Coincidentally, the committee called upon Mr. Wheeler to produce other data, including the names of contributors to the Antisaloon league who have given more than $500.

Mr. Wheeler's expressed desire to withhold these names from the public, on the ground that the contributors would prefer it, was not granted as Senator La Follette objected. Likewise Mr. Wheeler's proposal to send the committee certified copies of such records as it desired from Westerville, as a substitute for the plan to send an accountant to headquarters, was overruled.

Mr. Wheeler did not have the books of the Antisaloon league national organization when he took the stand yesterday and he pleaded the impracticability of producing records extending over so many years. But he did bring reports from four State branches of the Antisaloon league, New York, New Jersey, Ohio and Indiana. The figures from these four States covering a period from 1920 to 1925, inclusive, showed expenditures of $3,603,506.

Cover Only Six Years.

These figures from four out of 48 States, covering a six-year period only, indicated to some members of the committee that Mr. Wheeler's figure of $35,000,000 spent by the Antisaloon league may be merely a fraction of the actual amount spent, especially as the expenditures by the State organizations are apart from the amounts expended by the national organization of the Antisaloon league, and are exclusive of amounts expended by the league in political campaigns.

When Mr. Wheeler said he had not brought the books but would himself provide certified copies, the Senate committee went into executive session. When the session was over, Mr. Reed, of Missouri, chairman of the committee, informed Mr. Wheeler of the committee's decisions.

Later, during the hearing, Senator Reed said the committee would undertake to investigate any anti-prohibition or church organization or the Ku Klur Klan, if information is brought in indicating their activities in political campagns. As the Ku Klux Klan admits its activity in politics, the question of investigating the klan now apparently depends on whether or not the committee is provided with clews as to this secret organization's role in politics.

Will Summon Stayton.

W. H. Stayton, president of the League Against Prohibition, will be summoned before the committee, it is announced. Mr. Wheeler has taken under advisement the question of submitting names connected with other organizations said to be interested in defeating the Volstead act or repealing the eighteenth amendment.

Mr. Stayton resides in Baltimore, but the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment has offices here at the Lenox building. When the wet and dry hearings were in progress before the Senate subcommittee, Mr. Stayton said that the list of members totaled about 750,000. No secret is made of the fact that the organization is seeking and has been seeking to change the Volstead act and legalize the sale of beer. But nothing has so far been shown to indicate that this organization has been a factor in political campaigns. After the exposure relative to payment of moneys to several dry senators and representatives by the Antisaloon league for making prohibition speeches, a demand was made by leaders of the dry cause that wet organizations be subjected to the same in-

Coolidge Request Brings Action on Farm Measure

President's Intervention Halts Bloc's Attempt to Abandon Bill and Turns Senate to Fess Amendment. Veterans' Relief Gets Preference.

President Coolidge's intervention in the battle over farm relief in the Senate had an immediate effect yesterday. It frustrated the farm bloc's plan to abandon the farm bill, now that the Haugen amendment has been defeated, and it injected life into the Fess amendment, which heretofore has had little or no chance of being given serious consideration.

Senator Watson, who on Friday moved to displace the farm bill, withdrew his motion as soon as he got the floor yesterday. Senator McNary and others of the farm bloc were in conference with Mr. Watson before the session began.

Later the farm bill was temporarily withdrawn by unanimous consent, in order to let the bill for relief of world war veterans have its innings. Senator Reed, of Pennsylvania, pointed out that vocation training for wounded veterans would cease under the law on June 30 unless some action was taken, and this stirred the Senate to give the veterans' bill right of way. But the farm bill comes back automatically, by unanimous consent, when the veterans' bill is passed, and farm relief is expected to be again before the Senate tomorrow.

Efforts of Senator Dill to have the radio bill disposed of before farm relief came back were not successful as Senator McNary objected to this plan.

When Senator Watson got the floor shortly after the Senate assembled, he said that he had made his motion to withdraw the farm bill without knowledge of the fact that President Coolidge wanted the Fess amendment enacted into law.

"I did not know the President favored the Fess amendment," he said. "I do not favor it, but I do not wish, by any act of mine, to deny the Senate the right to vote on this measure. Therefore I withdraw my motion."

The program now is for the Senate to go ahead and discuss and vote on pending amendments to the House farm bill, which provides for the setting up of a cooperative marketing bureau in the Depart-

ILLINOIS PRIMARY COST $3,000,000, IS CHARGED

Caraway Says Senatorial Canvass Was Orgy of Corruption and Vote Buying.

DEMANDS INQUIRY NEXT

Picturing the recent McKinley-Smith senatorial contest as an orgy of graft, corruption and wholesale vote buying, paling anything thus far disclosed in the Pennsylvania election inquiry, Senator Caraway (Democrat), Arkansas, in a Senate speech yesterday afternoon, demanded that the Reed special slush fund investigating committee turn its searchlight into Illinois at once.

Senator Caraway's speech, a terrible indictment of Illinois and Chicago politics, raked Senator McKinley and Frank L. Smith, chairman of the public utilities commission, and the successful candidate alike, charging that in their campaigns "Not only were vast sums of money used, but positions of public trust were debauched to procure contributions and influence votes."

It charged that public service corporations throughout the State were bludgeoned into donating to the Smith war chest by the possibility of retaliation for refusal in the form of rate reduction or drastic service modification orders fom the utilities commission over which Smith retained his chairmanship during the campaign.

Samuel Insull, whom he dubbed the "utility monarch" of the State, although an unwilling contributor, Senator Caraway asserted, "found it cheaper to 'come across' than chance the loss of millions in reduced rates," and donated at least $500,000 individually or through subordinates.

Reports of a $100,000 contribution to the Smith fund by E. H. Rollins & Sons, Chicago investment bankers, interested in a $20,000,000 utility merger pending before the commission, the alleged pay-

WIND, RAIN AND HAIL DAMAGE IN 2 STATES

Highways Blocked in West New York—Cloudburst in Massachusetts.

Seneca Falls, N. Y., June 26 (By A. P.).—Telephone and telegraph communication with the outside world was cut off tonight, highways were blocked by fallen trees, and thousands of dollars of damage was done to crops, as the result of a wind, hail and rainstorm that swept through western New York this afternoon.

Hailstones as large as marbles fell 6 inches deep at Free Bridge.

Hail killed 500 baby chicks at Waterloo.

Springfield, Mass., June 26 (By A. P.).—One of the most severe storms of the season broke upon western Massachusetts early this afternoon. Rain, taking the form of a miniature cloudburst, fell upon this city and vicinity. In Ware it was reported that hailstones as big as marbles fell, causing slight damage to crops. No damage to the tobacco crop was reported.

TWO PERSONS DROWN SWIMMING IN POTOMAC

BOY DIES IN RIVER HOLE

Two persons were drowned in the Potomac river here yesterday. They were Edward G. Nolan, 21 years old, 19 Grant place northwest, and Charles Smith, colored, 13 years old, 620 Fifth street northeast.

Nolan was drowned in the Potomac river, three miles above Cabin John bridge, while swimming with a companion, A. G. Evans, of the Montgomery apartments. Nolan, Evans said, apparently was seized with a cramp and sank. Swimming to him he caught him as he rose to the surface, but Nolan held him so tightly that both were threatened with drowning and he had difficulty in breaking away. Nolan came to the surface only once after that and he was not able to reach him again, Evans said.

Nolan was the son of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Nolan, and was chief chemist of the Washington Gas Light Co. His body was recovered by Maryland authorities and was taken to the undertaking establishment of A. J. Schippert and prepared for burial. Funeral arrangements have not been completed.

The Smith boy predicted his own death. With three friends, Isaiah Queen, Edward Jones and John Saunders, all colored boys, he went to a swimming hole in the Eastern branch, near a sewer outlet. They sought relief from the midday heat in the cool waters.

"I can't swim and I'm going out to drown," the boy told his companions in fun. A moment later he stepped over the brink of a 25-foot hole. The other boys ran to the boathouse of Harry D. Bailey, near the Benning bridge, for help, and Frank Craig, 115 Fifth street southeast; G. King, 4941 Quarles street northeast, and Arthur Gullickson, of Berwyn, Md., rowed to the hole and dived for the boy's body. It was not recovered until police arrived from the harbor precinct and brought it to the surface with grappling irons. Coroner Nevitt issued a certificate of accidental death.

Woman, Dreaming, Shoots Self Fatally

Birmingham, Ala., June 26 (By A. P.).—Mrs. Louise F. Leigeber, 19, who shot herself Thursday night while dreaming that she was being attacked by a man, died here today.

Mrs. Leigeber's subconscious mind presented a picture that caused her to pull a pistol from beneath her pillow while sleeping and fire at her imaginary assailant. The bullet entered her left side.

CAILLAUX REMOVES ROBINEAU AS HEAD OF BANK OF FRANCE

Enemy of Inflation, Who Held On to the Gold Reserve, Out.

MOREAU, OF ALGERIAN BANK, RECEIVES PLACE

Conservative and Radical Press Against Ratifying U. S. Debt Pact.

Paris, June 26 (By A. P.).—The first administrative act of Joseph Caillaux, as minister of finance in the new Briand cabinet, was to replace Georges Robineau, governor of the Bank of France, by M. Moreau, director of the Bank of Algeria.

This act, which ordinarily would have been received as a sensational measure justifying the reputation of the finance minister for audacity, has been received calmly, as it has been discounted for some time.

M. Robineau, who long has been an opponent of inflation, has been at grips with the French ministry ever since the radical socialist coalition came into power in 1924. He also has been a staunch opponent of the use of the gold reserve in the Bank of France in an effort to stabilize the franc.

Clashed With Herriot.

The first serious crisis in his relations with the French ministry came in the spring of 1925. The Herriot government, then in power, urgently requiring funds to meet demands for the reimbursement of the national defense bonds, demanded advances from the Bank of France in excess of the limit authorized by parliament. M. Robineau at that time gave way to the demands of the Herriot government rather than be responsible for the consequences of a default on the bonds.

Recently the Bank of France was urged by the Briand government to use part of its gold reserve to protect the franc on the theory that 1,000,000,000 francs in gold would repatriate most of the French paper money abroad and prevent its being thrown on the market continually to the detriment of the exchange. M. Robineau and the regents of the bank refused to acquiesce in this proposal.

Others May Resign.

Today's announcement that M. Robineau had been replaced as governor was preceded by a conference among G. Caillaux, M. Robineau and several regents of the bank. According to some reports, several of the regents threatened to hand in their resignations if M. Robineau was sacrificed.

An official note issued by the ministry of finance said that M. Moreau had been appointed to succeed M. Robineau as governor of the bank. The latter in recognition of his long and eminent servi-

Fliers May Converse With Homes by Phone

Berlin, June 26 (By A. P.).—Passengers on the huge air liners of the German air service, which on some planes furnishes movies and phonograph music for the diversion of air travelers, will soon be able to pick up a wireless telephone receiver and, despite the roar of three 120-horsepower motors, talk with any large city of Germany.

Wireless telephone experiments between pilots on two of the night air routes and landing fields have proved successful. The pilot circling over Stockholm, Sweden, in a thunderstorm talked with Templehofer field, Berlin, for five minutes.

Prince, a Prisoner, Said to Be Sinking

Vienna, Austria, June 26 (By A. P.).—Prince Ludwig Windisch-Graetz, implicated in the thirty-million franc forgery case, at Budapest, is reported to be seriously ill in the prison hospital, and "rapidly growing worse." It is alleged that he is suffering from partial paralysis.

It is also stated that surgeons hesitate to perform an operation on the prince in the fear that it might bring on total paralysis.

Pitcher, Facing a Crisis, Falls Dead on Diamond

Richmond, Va., June 26 (By A. P.).—Floyd B. Chewning, 19, of Richmond, fell dead from heart failure while pitching a baseball game against the Highland Park Juniors. The bases were full when he sagged and plunged to the ground, and it is believed his heart failed because of excitement superinduced by the pitching crisis he faced.

Chewning, pitching for the Ginter Park Juniors, died with a smile on his face. When he fell his team mates crowded about him. But it was not until Theodore (Pop) Schaffer, former big league player, and manager of the Highland Park team, placed his ear to the youth's heart that the tragedy was realized.

Chewning walked a batsman, filling the bases. The score was tied and only one man out. Calmly he toed the slab and began a slow windup which never was completed. With his hand poised in the air he fell dead.

JURY FINDS SCOTT SANE; FACES GALLOWS AGAIN

Alleged Slayer, Often Saved by Reprieve, Was Sent to Asylum in August.

BROTHER IS IMPLICATED

Chicago, Ill., June 26 (By A. P.).—Russell Scott, erstwhile Canadian financier, tonight was found to be sane by a jury in a sanity hearing, thus paving the way for his execution for killing Joseph Maurer, a Chicago drug clerk, in a holdup two years ago.

Scott, by the jury's verdict, faces the shadow of the gallows again, after a desperate fight during which he was once saved by being found insane. At that time he was committed to the Chester Insane asylum, under the provision that if he should become sane, he was to be returned here and the sentence of death carried out.

The next step in sending him to the gallows is to fix the date for his execution.

The jury deliberated two hours. It was reported that the first ballot was 7 to 5 to find him sane, the next 9 to 3 and the third unanimous.

During the hearing Scott paid little attention to the proceedings to all appearances, but was aroused from his lethargy today when George E. Gorman, assistant States attorney, in his closing arguments referred to a letter Scott had written saying he had no use for his mother.

Scott leaped to his feet shouting, "You're a liar, a hypocrite and a rat," and as bailiffs struggled with him he exclaimed, "I'm not insane."

William Scott Stewart, Scott's attorney, who once before saved him from the gallows, declared in his argument that this is the first time in history that the State has

D. I. WALSH TO SEEK SENATE NOMINATION

Announcement Is Made at Democratic Meeting in Massachusetts.

Worcester, Mass., June 26 (By A. P.).—Former Senator David I. Walsh's candidacy for the Democratic senatorial nomination next September was formally announced at a dinner of the Democratic State committee here today.

The former senator was in Chicago and unable to be present, but announcement that he would run came from former Senator A. Owsley Stanley, of Kentucky, principal speaker of the evening. Beyond the bare announcement of his candidacy, no statement from Mr. Walsh was made. The committee pledged his solid support.

14 Persons Injured In Wreck of Trolley

Chicago, June 26 (By A. P.).—Fourteen persons were injured, two seriously, today when a southbound electric car of the Chicago & Joliet railway, loaded with employes of the Chicago board of education going to a picnic, jumped the tracks and sideswiped a northbound car at Willow Springs, a suburb.

The conductor of one of the cars suffered internal injuries and one passenger suffered a fractured skull. Most of the others were bruised or cut by flying glass. Officials of the company said they were unable to determine what caused the car to jump the rails.

SHACK OF ALLEGED KIDNAPERS IS FOUND

Woman's Footprints in the Mexican Hills Paralleled by Those of Horse.

Los Angeles, Calif, June 28 (By A. P.).—Aimee Semple McPherson, evangelist, who dropped from sight at the beach May 18 to reappear in Douglas, Ariz., June 23 relating a story of abduction, torture and privation, came to the end of her homeward trail here today, surrounded by thousands of milling admirers. She trod a carpet of roses in fragrant contrast to the blistering sands of the Mexican desert, across which she said she fled from her abductors last Tuesday.

Lavish Preparations.

M. F. McCarthy, special agent of the Southern Pacific, in charge of a squad of guards at the station into which Mrs. McPherson's train pulled, said that the arrangements to guard the little white-clad and bronze-haired woman and the preparations made by her followers to greet her were more detailed and lavish than those which attended the visits to Los Angeles of President Wilson, King Albert of Belgium, or former President Taft.

Tears of joy stood in thousands of eyes, trickled down the wrinkled cheeks of old men and women whose religious fervor and tithes from their savings have helped the exponent of the "four square gospel" to build the great circular Angelus temple, from which she broadcasts the tenets of her faith.

From the throats of the younger of her followers poured a welling deluge of cheers and shouts, calls of welcome and cries of fervent loyalty.

Praise The Lord, They Mutter.

"Hosanna" and "Hallelujah" echoed and reechoed and over the great assemblage there swept in an undertone from hundreds of lips of Angelus temple adherents a devout "praise the Lord."

Great throngs of the curious as well as temple followers jammed streets in every direction from the station. In these ranks there broke anew the controversy which has raged about the case since the day in May when Mrs. McPherson walked into the Santa Monica surf and her secretary, Miss Emma Schaeffer, and her mother, Mrs. Minnie Kennedy, announced that she had been drowned.

The temple pastor, accompanied by her mother and her two children, Roberta by her first husband, Robert

Wheat Is Harvested; In Bread Same Day

Lyons, Kans., June 26 (By A. P.).—Harvesters who worked yesterday morning on the farm of Jean Gray, near here, last night ate bread made from the wheat they had harvested.

The wheat was cut by a combine, rushed to a Lyons mill where it was ground into flour and returned to the Gray farm in time for the housewives to make bread for the evening meal.

Wheat in this region is unusually hard and free from moisture this year.

Shark Attacks Two On California Beach

Redondo Beach, Calif., June 26 (By A. P.).—A ten-foot thrasher shark battled two lifeguards in a surf at North Beach near here yesterday and the men came out victorious.

The lifeguards, Paul Nelson and Ray Kegeris, both nationally known swimmers, were attacked while riding on a surf board. The shark had bit through the board and was gaining an advantage when other bathers came to the rescue. A blow with an oar stunned the big fish and it was towed to shore.

COAL DEALERS WARNED TO ANSWER SUMMONS

Local Merchants Who Fail to Attend Inquiry Face Prosecution.

SIX ORDERED TO APPEAR

Local coal dealers, who have been subpenaed to appear before the Senate District committee tomorrow with their books, will be prosecuted in the local courts if they fail to respond, it was learned yesterday.

Six of the dealers have been served with processes from the office of the Senate sergeant-at-arms, as the last gesture of the Senate District committee in its long-standing efforts to examine the dealers' books. While there have been indications heretofore that the dealers would refuse to respond, thus challenging the committee's authority, those subpenaed have not indicated what attitude they would take.

In the event of their refusal, however, it was learned that the committee is prepared to direct United States Attorney Gordon to prosecute them under an existing statute, which makes refusal to respond to a committee summons a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 nor less than $100 and imprisonment for not less than 1 month nor more than 12 months.

Robinson Leads Attack by 9 Democrats and Republican

GUARDIANSHIP BAN PROVISION APPROVED

The onslaught which has been brewing against Commissioner Fenning in the Senate for the last several days, broke in a fury yesterday, as approval was given to a provision designed to end his wholesale guardianship practice.

Led by Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, nine Democrats and Senator Reed (Republican), Pennsylvania, waded guardedly into a discussion of his practice which in short order developed into an open denunciation of him. Senator Reed said he had no defense for the commissioner.

"We feel exactly as the senator (Robinson) seems to feel about the impropriety of one man loading on to himself a great number of guardianships, which he can not properly look after," Senator Reed declared.

Other Officials Included.

The attack, which before it was over, embraced Chief Justice McCoy, of the District Supreme court; Dr. W. A. White, superintendent of St. Elizabeths hospital, and the veterans' bureau, turned on the action of Senator Reed's committee in striking from the general war veterans' bill a provision which had been inserted by the House, aimed directly at Mr. Fenning, authorizing the director of the veterans' bureau to limit the number of wards any guardian may have.

The committee was unanimously of the opinion that the provision might intrude upon the rights of State courts, and in lieu of it inserted a provision bolstering the standing of the veterans' bureau in the courts, which in the case of Commissioner Fenning, would have empowered the bureau to go into court and point out that he could not take care of 100 wards, and thus have the court disintegrate his business.

Something stronger than that was necessary to deal with the local situation, however, the Democrat battery declared, Senator McKellar, of Tennessee, asserted that ordinarily the committee language would be all right but that in this instance the local courts had found that the fiduciary was acting improperly—referring to his self-bonding practice—but was permitted merely to pay back his illegal fees and retaining him as guardian.

Not Protected by Courts.

It was all right to talk about letting the courts take care of the wards but this was an instance of where the courts were not protecting them, it was declared.

Under an onslaught by Senator Robinson, the members of the committee, including Senators George, of Georgia, and Jones, of New Mexico, disavowed with Senator Reed any condoning of the commissioner's practice—everyone felt the same way about it—but the committee had thought because of the State interests that the course it provided would be the more proper. Senator Jones healed the breach when he offered an amendment providing that the provision empowering the bureau director to withhold compensation from wards when one guardian has too many shall apply only to the District.

The senators dealt gingerly with the commissioner at first because of the possibility that it may have to sit in judgment of him, but Senator Heflin, of Alabama, finally threw off all restraint, and declared:

"I have gotten the impression, I am sorry to say, that there is an attempt here to whitewash Mr. Fenning, and I do not intend that it shall be done. I do not care whether I am to sit as a judge in this case or not. I am willing to take a chance now and wait for subsequent developments in that matter. It might be I would go so far in this case that I would excuse myself if he were to be tried by the Senate."

Insofar as it is within his power, In so far as it is within his power, ed to see that action was taken before Congress adjourned.

"The history of this matter shows that the courts did not pro-

CAPITAL BOOSTERS INSPECT SHIPYARD ON VIRGINIA FROLIC

Merchants and Manufacturers Have Gala Time as Steamer Heads South.

"COURT" HEARS PLEA MADE BY RUDOLPH

Church and Golf Feature Program Today; Send Messages Home.

(By a Staff Correspondent.)

On board the steamer Southland, June 26.—The end of a day of frolicking, interspesed with thoughts of absent friends, and the spreading of the gospel, "Buy in Washington," found the 227 Washington business men participating in the annual boosters' outing of the Merchants and Manufacturers association steaming out toward the Atlantic.

Two hours ashore in Newport News were spent by the boosters inspecting the shipyards and the town, while a burning sun blazed unpityingly upon them. At 5:30 they sailed away from the city with the prow pointing for the capes of Virginia.

Aboard the ship a mock court was set up and with deep solemnity and grave legal technicalities the answer of the Merchants and Manufacturers association to the petition of Commissioner Rudolph was heard. The plea of the commissioner, made before the departure of the ship, urged that in the future the date of the outing be set so as not to interfere with the birthday of the commissioner and prevent his attending as a "dead head."

"Judge" Gives Answer.

The answer was placed before "Judge" Carter B. Keene by Counsel Ringchris Rosskeen, which name was coined to incorporate the names of Ringgold Hart, assistant corporation counsel, Charles "Chris" Columbus, secretary of the association, M. D. Rosenberg, counsel for the association, and Mr. Keene.

The petition denied the commissioner's allegation that he is a citizen of the United States "for the reason that he is merely a commissioner of the District of Columbia, and therefore not an official of the United States, but a servant of the corporation of the District of Columbia, which has no body to be kicked, or soul to be damned."

The allegation that the trips have been made up of the "most select, jolly and all around good sports," also was denied as "self-evidently false and malicious, since the presence of the aforesaid, together with unnamed potato peelers, has displayed woeful lack of discretion in the selection of passengers."

The answer denied that the commissioner absorbed salt air and mineral waters on any of the trips heretofore, concluding the paragraph with the statement, "further deponent sayeth not."

In conclusion the answer stated that the association has no objection to granting the relief the commissioner asked for, and holds that the matters set forth in its answer are "as untrue and ficticious as is possible for human ingenuity to devise in the absence of one of the most beloved of all the boosters."

Friends Remembered.

The day on the water was frequently broken by the distribution of souvenirs by the business men. Representative Zihlman obtained for his autograph book the signatures of all the boosters aboard. Telegrams were sent to Harry M. Crandall, regretting the illness which prevented his participating in the trip; to Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Gans, congratulating them on their twenty-fifth anniversary, and to Commissioner Rudolph, extending brithday greetings.

Copies of The Washington Post were put aboard at Patuxent and greedily devoured by the men. Dr. Joseph Rogers, booster physician, and Dr. L. H. Taylor, booster surgeon, frolicked uninterrupted by any mishaps.

Tomorrow the Southland will put into Old Point in the morning for church services, and Yorktown later where golf, fishing and swimming will be indulged in by the men.

The Post Will Be Sent By Airplane to Boosters

The Washington Post will be sent by airplane to the members of the Boosters outing of the Merchants and Manufacturers association at Old Point Comfort this morning.

The newspapers will be taken from Anacostia field, at 4 o'clock this morning by Lieut. Stanton H. Wooster, naval aviator, who will fly with them to the naval air station at Hampton Roads, Va., where they will be conveyed to the steamer Southland by a navy motorboat, at 8 o'clock.

Secretary to Teach At Fairlington Camps

Miss Leta Heiner, field secretary of the Virginia State Sunday School association, has been named instructor in young people's methods at Camp Fairlington.

The camp will be held at Bluemont, Va., August 10 to 24. Mrs. Pearle Sharp, of Fairfax, will be director. The camp course of instructions will be submitted to the State Sunday School executive committee for approval and will be such as to place the camp on a standard basis with courses receiving credit in the international Sunday school standard. The boys' camp will continue from August 25 to September 1, following the girls' camp.

1,200 ATTEND THE OUTING

Mrs. Calvin Coolidge yesterday unexpectedly was one of the spectators at the picnic of the Royal Arcanum fraternal organization when the athletic events for children were being held. Mrs. Coolidge was driving through the park near the old Pierce Mill, scene of the picnic, and was attracted by the children. She left her car and watched the youngsters vie for honors.

The picnic was attended by approximately 1,200, half of whom were children. The festivities lasted from 2 until 6:30 o'clock, and are an annual affair of the organization. Automobiles, buses, street cars and other means of conveyance transported the merrymakers.

In the athletic events was a Charleston dancing contest, in which Junice Klotz, 12 years old, excelled. She was awarded a large doll. Virginia Broker and Margaret Clore were her nearest competitors and were given practical awards. Music was furnished by the 30-piece band of the Kallipolis Grotto, under the direction of Fred Wilken. Prizes were awarded to 35 contest winners.

J. H. Grubb headed the committee in charge of arrangements. Others who aided were J. Edward Swaine, Stephen Talkes, N. M. Schoolmaker, C. A. Bell, R. C. Lewis, R. Klotz, A. C. Giles, Edward Johnson, Mrs. W. J. Johnson, Mrs. J. H. Grubb and Mrs. I. C. Childs. Mr. Johnson was in charge of the athletic arrangements.

LONGER SCHOOL DAY SUGGESTION HELD CERTAIN OF DEFEAT

PARENT-TEACHERS, CIVIC BODIES OBJECT

Central Labor Union Adds Disapproval—Others Expected to Follow.

Overwhelming defeat of proposed lenghtening of the District public school day and week is forecast by votes of citizens and parent-teacher associations already recorded with the board of education. Not one of the several associations which have formally voted on the question has given approval to the suggested change.

To the almost unanimous negative vote of several hundred parents, members of the eleven citizens and school associations which have recorded themselves against any change in the present schedule, the Central Labor Union has added its unanimous disapproval.

The union body vote, made public at Franklin school yesterday, was given at a meeting attended by delegates representing each of the 60 affiliated organizations, with a membership of 65,000, Frank J. Coleman, secretary of the union, reported to the board.

Another Disapproval Expected.

Another blow is expected from the Midcity Citizens association at a special meeting called for 8 o'clock tomorrow night in the Thomson school by A. J. Driscoll, president.

Invitations to attend the meeting and express opinions have been extended by Mr. Driscoll to parent-teacher associations and to parents of children attending schools in the associations' territory. Among parent-teacher associations which will be represented will be the Thomson, Abbott, Webster, Henry-Polk, Barrett and Columbia junior high school.

"So far as I can ascertain, there is very little sentiment among parents for extension of the school week or lengthening of the school hours each day; and, I believe, our association will vote against the proposal," Mr. Driscoll said.

Would Avoid Responsibility.

"The whole move is a part of the effort of some parents to evade full duty to their children and an effort to force off on the schools work and training they should undertake themselves. The schools can not turn out the kind of good citizens we want and need without constant and intelligent work at home on the part of parents.

"There is to be, however, no effort to prevent a full and free expression of opinions by those who do not agree with me at the meeting Monday night. Our invitation has been issued in good faith because we want the parents of our district to tell us what they want us to tell the board of education as their representative."

Citizens' associations which have recorded their opposition include the Piney Branch, Stanton Park, Edgewood, the Georgetown Civic association and the Federation of Civic associations.

Among parent-teacher associations which have registered opposition are the Henry D. Cooke association, Carbery, Langley Junior high, Douglass-Simmons and Brent-Dent associations. Two or three other associations expressed their opposition to any change in hours before the board of education determined to put the matter to a vote of parents.

Questions Issued on Subject.

The board's questionnaire asks for a specific vote on three major questions, the first two of which are subdivided. The questions to be answered yes or no are:

In favor of dispensing with all home study of pupils, which is subdivided to call for a vote on the first six grades, the junior and senior high and the normal schools.

In favor of extending the school day, which also is subdivided to call for a separate vote as follows: First six grades from 3 to 3:45 o'clock, junior high schools from 3 to 3:45 o'clock, senior high schools from 2:30 to 4 o'clock, and normal schools from 3 to 4 o'clock.

Do you favor school on Saturday morning? is the third and last question. The questionnaire calls for a statement of the total membership of the association, attendance at the meeting at which the vote is taken and the vote on each of the questions, anad invites any remarks the association may care to record.

The questionnaire, the board said, was sent out in an effort to ascertain sentiment of the people of the District and does not mean that the board favors or opposes the suggested change, having taken no action on the question, pending outcome of the balloting.

The action of the board was the outcome of an attack on the school system by Brig. Gen. Amos A. Fries, before the Dupont Circle Citizens association last winter, in which he charged that pupils were given too much home work and study, and the schools were shirking their responsibility. He urged longer school hours as a means of eliminating home work now necessary.

Thought Plan Would Be Supported.

At subsequent conferences with school officials and members of the board of education, Gen. Fries reiterated his opinions and declared himself confident that if the question was put to a vote of parents of school children the board would find almost unanimous support of his plan. Unanimous disapproval of his plan, reported by Charles Carusi, board member, to the last meeting of the board of education last week brought a round of chuckles from other board members.

Mrs. Giles Scott Rafter, president of the parent-teacher associations of the district, however, is one who does not take the voting seriously. She asserted yesterday that many associations which have voted have been influenced by school principals and teachers, who do not wish to have the extra hours of labor added to their present work day.

JADE PENDANT GIVEN TO RETIRING TEACHER

Presentation Made at Dinner for Miss Wilson, Drawing Director

FIFTY YEARS IN SERVICE

Retirement Wednesday of Miss Annie M. Wilson, director of drawing in the public schools, after more than 50 years' service as a District school teacher, was marked by a farewell dinner in her honor Friday night in the Arts club, which was attended by Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, and Mrs. Ballou, and scores of teachers and members of the drawing teaching staff in the elementary, junior and senior high schools.

Miss Dorothy Kalb, teacher of art in the Wilson Normal school, presided at the dinner, at the close of which Miss Wilson was presented with a jade pendant by Miss Drain, teacher of art in Business High school, as the representative of the entire drawing corps.

In the course of the dinner a telegram from Dr. Percy M. Hughes, superintendent of schools of Syracuse, N. Y., was read. Dr. Hughes formerly was assistant superintendent of the District public schools. Dr. and Mrs. Ballou presented Miss Wilson with a basket of flowers.

Describing Miss Wilson's career as an unusual one, Dr. Ballou declared that it was seldom that any one closed their period of service "with the wealth of affectionate regard which your associates and superior officers have for you as you leave the service. May you live long to enjoy the rewards of a life devoted to the highest type of professional service, that of a teacher of youth."

2 Runaway Horses Injure Policeman

Two runaway army horses yesterday injured a traffic policeman, demolished the traffic stand at the District end of Key Bridge, and then collided with a Capital Traction street car on the bridge. One of the horses was killed in the collision with the car.

Thick Cap Saves Man Struck With Shovel

The thick cloth cap, which Myer Lipkin, 28 years old, 505 Second street northwest, wore yesterday, proved a savior from probably fatal injury. Eugene Hall, 52 years old, a laborer, 1802 Half street southwest, is at the Fourth precinct station accused of striking Lipkin in the head with a shovel. Lipkin is in Providence hospital suffering from a scalp wound.

According to Policeman D. A. Gourley, who arrested the alleged shovel wielder, the two engaged in an argument in front of the Blick Bros. wood yard, South Capitol and G streets. Lipkin, who is manager of the wood yard, requested Hall to refrain from dumping debris near the entrance of the yard, police say, and an argument ensued. Witnesses told police that the laborer struck Lipkin a heavy blow with the shovel, the force of which was checked by the thick cap. Assault with a dangerous weapon is charged against Hall.

DURKIN IS STUNNED WHEN SWEETHEART HELPS PROSECUTION

CLOTHING HE GAVE HER WAS STOLEN, SHE SAYS

Chicago, June 26 (By A. P.).—Betty Andrews Werner, discarded sweetheart of Martin J. Durkin, gunman, on trial for killing Edwin Shanahan, Federal agent, today had her inning in court.

Guarded closely by the State for many months because they feared an effort would be made by Durkin to effect a reconciliation with the girl, she mounted the witness stand and declared that Durkin had threatened to "shoot it out" with the police if an attempt were made to arrest him.

The girl, who turned against Durkin after he was married to Irma Sullivan, daughter of a Cornell, Ill., blacksmith, sobbed as she told her story, while Durkin himself cringed in his chair and stared wide-eyed at his former sweetheart, apparently scarcely able to believe his ears.

Threat to Kill Charged.

Durkin had made the threat to kill any officers who interfered with him while he was returning with her, from California in a stolen automobile, the witness said. The State sought thus to puncture the defense contention that Durkin did not know Shanahan was an officer when the latter tried to arrest him upon arrival here, and that he would not have shot had he been aware of the fact.

The girl's tears came today when she was asked regarding the paternity of her child. She admitted she is unmarried but denied that Durkin is the child's father. She made three trips to California with Durkin, she said, returning from the last on October 8, three days before Shanahan was shot. On cross examination, she denied that Durkin had bought her any clothes, "He stole them," she snapped.

She denied that the State had promised her immunity and when asked if she knew she could be sent to prison for violation of the Mann act, returned cooly, "I've already been through an investigation at the Federal building."

Never Had Much Feeling.

At the very last Durkin's counsel wanted to know if Betty didn't have just as much feeling for Durkin now as she ever did, and she replied in the affirmative, adding with a scornful look at Durkin, "and that wasn't much."

Preceding Miss Werner were Sacramento, Calif., policemen and a garage owner of Albuquerque, N. Mex., who were offered to tell of Durkin's escapades in the West. They were permitted only to place their names in the record, it having been established that their testimony concerned incidents not connected with the case on trial.

College-Like Jails Asked, With Jail-Like Colleges

New York, June 26 (By A. P.).—Colleges more like penitentiaries and penitentiaries more like colleges would make better students and better prisoners, in the opinion of Prof. Algernon de Vivier Tassin, who teaches Columbia students English and Sing Sing inmates art.

"There are too many distractions in the city," Prof. Tassin said today after an address before the International New Thought Alliance. "The students would be better off if they had more of the seclusion and discipline of prisons. I would like to send half the boys at Columbia to prison for a while. It would do them good.

"The law is an ass for not finding out what all parents know. Punishment is not enough in itself. It should be followed by kindness and love. Prisons give too much of punishment, seclusion and discipline. They should be more like colleges."

Bishop Performs Marriage of Son

Lowell, Mass., June 26 (By A. P.).—Edwin Holt Hughes, Methodist Episcopal bishop of Chicago, officated today at the marriage of his son Ebbert M. Hughes, of Springfield, to Miss Edna Lillian Laurin, of Lowell. Bishop Hughes was assisted by his elder son, the Rev. Edwin H. Hughes, jr., of Hingham, and the Rev. William J. Setzer, pastor of the Central Baptist church, where the ceremony was performed. The bride is a graduate of Smith college.

TRAIN BLAST KILLS 3; FLIER HITS WRECKAGE

RAIL MEN LOSE LIVES

Kingston, R. I., June 26 (By A. P.).—Three railroad employes were killed today when the boiler of a locomotive hauling 60 cars exploded while passing over marshland near here. The wreckage of the freight train was thrown onto the passenger tracks and a few minutes later the New York, New Haven & Hartford's "Cape Codder," from New York for Cape Cod points, crashed into the wreckage. The locomotive of the passenger train was thrown from the rails and the first car dived into the swamp. Several passengers were slightly hurt. The fact that none was seriously injured is believed to have been due to the fact that none of the upper berths on the flier was occupied. The train which runs only on Saturday mornings, was making its first trip of the season.

The dead:

William Moulton, engineer of the freight; George Hathaway, fireman of the freight; James J. Mulvaney, a spare man, riding in the cab of the freight locomotive.

The engineer of the express train was injured.

The boiler of the freight locomotive was hurled many feet into the swamp. Many of the shattered cars of the freight were filled with finished cloth and with bundles of American flags being shipped from the textile cities for the July 4 celebration. For a great distance the track was strewn with oil-bedraggled flags and bolts of cloth.

The cause of the explosion has not been determined.

Irene Castle Is Sorry She Started Bob Style

Special to the Washington Post.

New York, June 26.—The woman who is said to have started the bobbed-hair idea in America a dozen years ago now regrets it, for she sees its development into the boyish bob and masculine women. Mrs. Irene Castle McLaughlin, former dancer, wife of Frederick McLaughlin, of Chicago, expressed these views today when she sailed on the French Line steamship France for a shopping tour in Paris.

"I'm sorry I began it," she said today, "because it has gone into the boyish bob in so many cases. I think that is too extreme, too masculine, and I don't like women to be masculine."

Mrs. McLaughlin confessed that she has tried five times to let her tresses grow long again, but each time when they reached the "awkward" stage she had them cut.

SOCIETY BROKER GUILTY OF FRAUD, JURY FINDS

J. M. Smith, Mayflower Descendant, Swindled Life-Long Woman Friend.

WROTE VERSES IN REPLY

Special to The Washington Post.

New York, June 26.—James Milne Smith—one of the "Mayflower Smiths"—was convicted of stock swindling by a jury in general sessions court today. Mr. Smith, a tall, gray man with a dignity befitting his 61 years, gave no outward sign of his perturbation when Judge McIntyre said he would pronounce sentence next Thursday. A five-year sentence may be imposed.

The elderly prisoner, who once was wealthy, a companion of the socially elect and high in brokerage circles, was convicted of having mulcted Mrs. Grace Barton Randall, of Eastern Parkway, Brooklyn, a life-long friend, out of $17,000 in a stock deal. Mrs. Randall testified that her erstwhile friend and broker had written her verses in answer to her demands for the return of her money.

Several churchmen, whose names appear in the social register, testified as character witnesses for Mr. Smith, a former usher in fashionable St. Bartholomew's church in Park avenue. He lived with his wife at 54 East Fifty-fourth street.

The prisoner was at liberty on $3,000 bail for more than two years after his arrest in the spring of 1924.

In defending himself the broker testified that he had bought stock for her without margin and that her holdings had been wiped out in a market flurry.

IDEALS OF AMERICA IN WAR STILL LIVE, DECLARES HERRICK

Ambassador, at Monument to First Landing of U. S. Force, Praises Record.

MRS. WHITNEY'S WORK UNVEILED IN FRANCE

Pershing, at Banquet, Voices Thanks for Generosity of St. Nazaire.

St. Nazaire, France, June 27 (By A. P.).—The ideals which stirred Americans upon the entry of the United States into the world war are still essential characteristics of the American nation, Ambassador Myron T. Herrick said today in an address at the unveiling of a monument commemorating the landing of the first American troops on French soil nine years ago.

Speaking before a great crowd of French and American citizens, including John J. Pershing, Ambassador Herrick asserted that belief that the United States had become a nation of materialists was not true.

Standing within a short distance of a great monument designed by Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, the Ambassador declared that he did not believe the verdict of history would show that the United States had ever cringed when she was weak or had ever been arrogant when she was strong.

Proud of Fair Dealing.

"We look all other peoples today squarely and frankly in the face; proud of an unblemished record of fair dealing with all nations in the past, and calmly determined to continue this course in the future," the Ambassador said. "We say to them as Byron said to Tom Moore:

'Here's a tear for those that love me
And a smile for those that hate,
And whatever sky's above me
Here's a heart for any fate.'

Asserting that innuendoes had been spread that the United States had been stirred by selfish interests in entering the war, he continued:

"Every American should take pains to scotch this lie. The American's capacity for willing self-sacrifice for any cause he holds dear was not suddenly born in 1917, it has been his dominant characteristic for at least 200 years. It is as much alive in our people today as it was when we declared war, and we all know full well that during the three horrible years which preceded that date it was neither dead nor sleeping."

After presenting the monument to France, Ambassador Herrick congratulated the committee of Americans which raised the funds for its erection and paid tribute to the genius of Mrs. Whitney who had created the inspiring statue.

M. Leygues, minister of marine, who accepted the statue on behalf of the French nation, paid tribute to the American expeditionary force and its valorous service. He also expressed the deep admiration and love which France bears to Gen. Pershing personally.

Breaking his silence for the first time since his arrival in France, Gen. Pershing at the banquet tendered by the St. Nazaire Chamber of Commerce voiced his pleasure at being present at the unveiling. He paid special tribute to Gen. Rockenbach as organizer of the St. Nazaire base, and concluded.

"I desire to express my appreciation to the people of St. Nazaire for what they did to bring the war to an end. They could scarcely call their homes their own, as the Americans were billeted upon an hour's notice. I wish to extend to the people of St. Nazaire the greetings of the American army for making it possible for us to find ourselves at home in a strange land."

TOBIN HOME, OPPOSED TO GENERAL STRIKES

Treasurer of A. F. of L. Makes His Report on Labor Outlook Abroad.

Cincinnati, Ohio, June 26 (By A. P.).—Daniel J. Tobin, Indianapolis, president of the International Teamsters union, who recently returned from Europe where he made a survey of labor conditions, said here today that he was opposed to any general strike in the United States.

"I am firmly opposed to any general strike in the United States," said Tobin. "I have been through strikes and I know what they mean. And I don't see where the general strike did the workmen any good in England. But I am not criticizing them."

Tobin, who also is treasurer of the American Federation of Labor, today made a report of his findings of general labor conditions in Europe to the executive council of the federation, in session here.

"I would also say that the purposes of the general strike in England were entirely exaggerated and misstated in the American press," said Tobin. "There was no thought of a revolution on the part of British workers. They are 100 per cent patriotic, and 90 per cent of them are opposed to bolshevism and communism."

Berlin, June 26 (By A. P.).—An Actors' International association was formed today by the International Actors congress. Russian actors, however, declined to join the association but announced that they would continue to maintain their relations with the actors of the entire world.

EASTMAN DECLARES $2,786,165 BONUS

Rochester, N. Y., June 26 (By A. P.). — The fifteenth largest wage dividend ever paid by the Eastman Kodak Co., totaling $2,786,165.27, will be distributed July 1 to the 13,628 employes the world around, who worked portions or all of at least 26 weeks of 1925, it was announced today.

The story of Point's heroism was told to Maj. Stanley James, of the signal corps, by a farmer who saw the crash. He said the cadet was thrown clear of the plane when it fell to earth and that three times he attempted to rescue Maj. Moose from the flaming plane. The third time he was overcome, and his burned body was later found near that of the major.

Elections in Canada May Be Necessitated

Ottawa, Ont., June 26 (By A. P.).—After one of the most exciting sittings of the Canadian House of Commons and after a day of conferences and cabinet councils, the political situation remains uncertain and indefinite. Reports tonight were that Premier King was asking the governor general to grant a dissolution of parliament, and thus bring about general elections.

It is within the prerogative of the governor general to refuse to grant a dissolution, but whether he would do so is not apparent. Unconfirmed reports have been current that Premier King has already asked for dissolution and been refused.

FRANCE WINS POINT AFTER HER THREAT TO QUIT ARMS TALK

Upheld by Subcommittee Discussing the Strength of Navies at Geneva.

U. S. THE ONLY POWER VOTING AGAINST PARIS

Question of Age of Battleships Waits for Action by Full Military Group.

Geneva, June 26 (By A. P.).—The threat by France to bolt the subcommittee on naval affairs gave a new sensational twist to the disarmament discussions today.

Admiral de Jeanne and his French colleagues even went so far as to gather up their documents preparatory to leaving the League of Nations room where the sessions were held, but in the end everything was ironed out smoothly because the French got what they wanted.

The incident arose during a discussion on the age of warships; it was really a clash between the French and British experts. By a unanimous vote, the naval experts had accepted the French proposal that there seemed no doubt that the effective value of the tonnage of naval armaments, generally speaking, decreased with age.

The British then moved that as age was one of the factors which would inevitably be taken into consideration in any standard of comparison between navies, all discussion of the question of age should be closed, or at least deferred until the full military committee was ready to take up the problem of the limitation of armaments and methods of limitation. The British motion was adopted.

U. S. Votes Against France.

At this juncture the French introduced another proposal, as to whether from a technical standpoint, it was possible to set up a standard for a comparison of naval armaments without supplementing it with a standard of comparison of tonnage by the method of measuring the age of such armaments.

The British and some other experts argued that the proposal was out of order since the age discussion was closed. The French, however, insisted, asserting that they would withdraw from the committee unless a vote was taken, and make a separate report to the main military committee.

To prevent a possible rupture, the chairman put the French proposal to a vote, and it was decisively defeated as the French wished it to be. Twelve nations voted in the negative and only one, the United States, voted affirmatively. Six countries abstained.

The American delegation explained its affirmative vote by saying that it believed it was possible to set up a standard of comparison without providing a method of measuring the age of armaments. Age, the Americans argued, could not be considered as a standard of comparison of the strength of navies, but should be taken into consideration in a discussion of any standard of measurement of fleets.

Addressing the military subcommittee Maj. Gen. Nolan entered a reservation in behalf of the American delegation concerning the action of the committee yesterday in deciding that war material was not a primary and practical standard for measuring land armaments. Gen. Nolan explained that the Americans believed that any determination of military strength should include both personnel and material, although he admitted that in general personnel was of first importance.

Chicago Death Rate Called the Lowest

Chicago, June 26 (By A. P.).—Chicago leads the world in health, according to statistics released tonight by Herman N. Bundesen, commissioner of health. Dr. Bundesen's report shows a death rate of 11.5 per thousand for Chicago last year, while the nearest competitors are Berlin with a rate of 11.7 and New York with 12.2 per thousand.

Philadelphia, Buenos Aires, Paris, Bombay and Calcutta follow in order, with Calcutta having more than 32 deaths for each thousand residents.

The figures used in his report were obtained by Dr. Bundesen from health officers in the cities named.

AIR RACE WINNER

LT. COMDR. HOMER C. WICK.

MORE THAN 100 FLIERS COMPETE IN AIR MEET

Lieut. Comdr. Wick Is Winner of Seaplane Race at Miller Field.

22 GO FROM CAPITAL

New York, June 26 (By A. P.). Neither bones nor records were broken by more than 100 national guard, navy, marine corps and civilian aviators who participated today in the twenty-seventh division air meet at Miller field.

Planes of many types, including the Josephine Ford, in which Lieut. Comdr. Richard Byrd flew over the top of the world, whirled about Staten island during the day. Floyd Bennett, Byrd's pilot, took the famous Fokker up twice. Rene Fonck, French ace, watched the flight from the ground.

Speed races, parachute jumping, relay races, "stunts" and formation flying were among the events. A crowd estimated at 25,000 watched the fliers at their antics.

The seaplane race was won by Lieut. H. C. Wick, of Anacostia field, Washington, in a navy U. O.-1 plane. The course was from Miller field to the Statue of Liberty and return.

The landing-to-a-mark event was won by J. G. Ray, of Pitcairn field, Philadelphia, a civilian. He flew a P. A.-3.

Lieut. Comdr. Homer C. Wick is commanding officer of the naval air station at Anacostia, D. C. He is in charge of the racing detachment of the navy and has participated in many racing events. He flew in the race at Mitchel field last year and he was in charge of the Schneider cup race at Baltimore last October.

Lieut. W. G. Farrell, United States marine corps, was the only officer who flew back to the naval air station last night. The others will fly back this morning, weather permitting, it was announced.

Fifteen planes and about 22 officers flew to Miller field from here yesterday morning. Two new planes, a FB-3 Boeing fighting and a F6-6 Curtiss fighter, were among those that went. The others were the regular service-type planes.

Oil Derrick Sinks, Leaving Big Crater

Orange, Tex., June 25 (By A. P.).—A practically noiseless "blowout" yesterday caused the 112-foot derrick and drilling machinery of a Gulf Production Co. well near here to drop from sight, leaving a crater 40 feet in diameter. The crater today is nearly filled with water. Oil men say it is the first blowout of its kind on record.

Usually blowouts, the oil field term for the occurence, are accompanied by a loud roar of escaping gas and the noise of the casing being cut by sand boulders. In this instance, however, there was only a shower of mud and water and a slight upheaval of the earth before the huge derrick disappeared.

Congress' Bulkiest Bill Passed.

(By the Associated Press.)

Congressional action was completed yesterday on the bulkiest bill ever before Congress, a measure to codify Federal laws, with acceptance by the House of minor Senate amendments to the 1,700-page document. It now goes to the President.

ECONOMIC DISTRESS GIVEN AS A CAUSE OF SPANISH REVOLT

Nobility Joined Republicans in the Plot, Says Dispatch to Buenos Aires.

WEYLER WAS DROPPED FROM GENERAL STAFF

Those Arrested, of All Classes, Held Incommunicado at Prisons in Madrid.

Buenos Aires, June 26 (By A. P.).—Ultraconservative generals, some of them of the nobility, joined with republicans in a vast conspiracy against the Spanish government because of economic distress which was especially felt in Madrid, says a dispatch to La Nacion from Hendaye, France.

More than 100 persons, including 30 military officers, were arrested in Madrid alone Thursday, the dispatch says. Some of those arrested are believed to be free of blame and their only connection was friendship for the plotters.

The consensus in Madrid, it is declared, is that the conspiracy was inspired by patriotic motives, particularly because of dissatisfaction in Madrid caused by the new tax laws and in the army because of the substitution of the merit system in place of seniority promotion.

Weyler Had Been Ousted.

Gen. Weyler, known in Cuba for his harshness as administrator there before the Spanish-American war, was moved to join the conspiracy because of his anger at being ousted as chief of the general staff. He was able to muster much of his great following in opposition to the dictatorship of Gen. Primo de Rivera. Eighteen generals in all were named as conspirators. Several regiments in Madrid, Barcelona, and Valencia were counted upon to join the plot.

The republicans, Marcelino Domingo and Deputy Barcibro, the communist leader Juan Andrade, the syndicaalist leader Salvador Quemades and Dr. Maranon, famous physician and vice president of the Ateneo, the foremost cultural and literary society of Spain, are among those named as leaders of the plot.

La Nacion says that an agent provocature gained confidence of the plotters. Thursday night police and detectives swept down on them.

One officer drew his revolver, but it was wrested from him before he could fire it. Civilians were taken to the Madrid prison and the military men to San Francisco prison and were held incommunicado.

Dr. Maranon's wife even was refused permission to see him.

Madrid was in great excitement for news of the frustrated plot swept with the speed of lightning and was discussed in cafes and bars all night.

Next morning, Friday, friends of the prisoners assembled before the prisons in the hope of seeing them.

Gen. Weyler was detailed at Palma on the island of Majorca, and Gen. Aguilera, former minister of war, in Ciudadreal.

The cabinet was reported in continuous session since Wednesday afternoon. Censorship of news has been strict.

Nearly 200 Arrested.

Nearly 200 prominent persons were arrested in Madrid in connection with the frustrated plot, it was said by Spaniards who arrived at Biarritz yesterday.

The Spanish government announced in Madrid last night that the plot had been "utterly crushed."

The government described the plotters as a group that could not be more mixed and ridiculous.

CHANG REACHES PEKING FOR MEETING WITH WU

Conference, It Is Expected, Will Result in Drive on National Armies.

NEW GOVERNMENT NEXT

Peking, June 26 (By A. P.).—Marshal Chang Tso-Lin, ruler of Manchuria, arrived here today for the long-deferred conference with Marsha Wu Pei-Fu, which is expected to result in a campaign to eliminate the national armies of the recently deposed government. The national armies are encamped at the edge of the Gobi desert, where they halted in their retreat from Peking when the pursuit of the allied forces ceased.

Dispersal of the national armies is considered first on the program of Chang Tso-Lin and Wu Pei-Fu in the establishment of a new government in which they are the moving factors. Completion of the cabinet and recall of the parliament are secondary.

Chang Tso-Lin's entry was a military one. Two brigades of bodyguards escorted him. The streets through which he passed, though beflagged in his honor, were heavily picketed.

Marshal Wu Pei-Fu, dominant militant in several provinces, is reported on the way from Paotingfu for the conference with Chang Tso-Lin, formerly his adversary in battle.

Former Slave Dies at Age of 115.

Chicago, June 26 (By A. P.).—Jane Moore, negro woman said by her relatives to be 115 years of age, is dead at her home in Glencoe, a suburb. A native of Alabama, she was a slave of ante-bellum days.

HUNDREDS TO BE BURIED TOGETHER AFTER FLOOD

No Accurate Estimate of the Death Total in Mexico Is Possible.

20,000 ARE HOMELESS

Mexico City, June 26 (By A. P.). Burial of the several hundred victims of the flood at Leon, Guanajuato state, in trenches and without identification if necessary, has been ordered by the authorities as a precaution against epidemic.

Difficult communications still make it impossible to obtain an accurate estimate of the casualties, the latest figures ranging all the way from 100 to 1,000. The maximum is given by El Universal's correspondent in the stricken zone. Large numbers of bodies are believed to be hidden under debris.

It is estimated that probably 15,000 or 20,000 persons are homeless and that the property damage may reach 30,000,000 pesos. Thus far shipments of food and relief supplies have been inadequate, chiefly because the railroad tracks of some of the main lines leading to Leon have been washed away. The El Universal correspondent failed to find any railroad routes open and was only able to reach the city by traveling on muleback and railroad handcars. He found some of the streets of the city still submerged with buildings crumbling under the water.

Special dispatches from Guadajuato report that clothing and other supplies are being assembled there to be sent to Leon by muleback and automobile. The success of these measures is not known yet because of the inundated conditions of the roads leading to the stricken city.

MALOLO, HIGH SPEED COAST-TO-HONOLULU STEAMER, LAUNCHED

HOOVER SEES GROWTH OF AMERICAN MARINE

Craft Is One of Biggest Passenger Boats Built in America.

Philadelphia, June 26 (By A. P.).—In the presence of Secretary of Commerce Hoover, the 22,000-ton steamship Malolo, designed to cut down the time between San Francisco and Honolulu from twelve to eight days, was launched from the Cramp's shipyard today.

The steamer, 582 feet long, is said to be one of the largest passenger vessels ever built in the United States.

Miss Wilhelmina Tenney, daughter of E. D. Tenney, president of the Matson Navigation Co., which will operate the ship, named the vessel as it started down the ways into the Delaware river.

Nature Songs Sung.

Standing close to Miss Tenney were Lurline and Berenice Roth, the 6-year-old twins of W. P. Roth, vice president and general manager of the company, who acted as the honorary sponsors. Miss Tenney crashed the traditional beribboned bottle against the prow of the Malolo as it started to recede.

A group of Hawaiian women, here to attend the convention of the National Education association next week, sang a native song as the ship took the water.

Prior to the launching Secretary Hoover was the guest of honor at a luncheon at the Bellevue-Stratford hotel. In a short address he said that private enterprise in American coastal shipping is the hope of this country for extension of its power in international shipping.

Second Largest Fleet.

"From our coastwise shipping, including traffic with Porto Rico, Hawaii and the Great Lakes, has grown a merchant marine that comprises 7,000 vessels, totaling nearly 9,000,000 tons, or 14 per cent of the shipping of the world," said Mr. Hoover.

"This is the largest fleet outside of that of one great power. It is great, though resting on a coastal basis.

"Coastal shipping is one of our strong national defenses, because it is exclusively ours and forms a basis for overseas service."

The building of the Malolo, Mr. Hoover said, was a most hopeful thing for the upbuilding of international shipping.

The Malolo will have accommodations for 693 first-class passengers. In time of war it can be readily converted into a troop transport, airplane carrier or cruiser.

Wilda Bennett to Pay Mrs. Frey but $25,000

New York, June 26 (By A. P.). Wilda Bennett, musical comedy star, won a reduction today in the amount of money she was ordered by a jury to pay to Mrs. Charles Frey for alleged alienation of her husband's affections.

The appellate division of the supreme court in Brooklyn ruled on appeal that Mrs. Frey must accept $25,000 instead of the $37,662 granted her, and that within 20 days, or the appellate division will order a retrial of the case.

Men Formerly High In Lisbon Arrested

Paris, June 26 (By A. P.).—A Havas dispatch from Lisbon says the police of the Portuguese capital have arrested several political personages, including Col. Helder Ribiero and Pestana Junior, who were respectively ministers of war and finance in the Santos cabinet, which resigned in February, 1925.

Manifestoes were seized, protesting against the present political situation in Portugal.

PRESIDENT INSPECTS JEFFERSON'S OLD GIG

Historic Vehicle, on Way to Philadelphia, Stops at White House.

The historic old gig in which Thomas Jefferson journeyed from Monticello to Philadelphia with the original draft of the Declaration of Independence, in 1776, was inspected yesterday by President Coolidge, at the White House. Mounted on an automobile, the ancient vehicle was exhibited to the President shortly after noon, escorted by its board of officials appointed by the Thomas Jefferson centennial commission.

A section of the United States Army band and a guard of honor of members of the President's own garrison, Army and Navy Union, of which Maj. W. E. Peake is commander, accompanied the gig from its temporary shelter in the lobby of the Mayflower hotel to the White House. It arrived here late Friday afternoon from Fredericksburg, Va., en route to the sesquicentennial exposition in Philadelphia. The guard escorted the gig to Baltimore.

At Baltimore, to which destination it proceeded after the brief inspection, the old two-wheeler will be viewed by Gov. Ritchie and a detachment of the celebrated Richmond Blues. The trip is under auspices of the American Automobile association.

BEARER OF ROOSEVELT KIDNAPING TALE DIES

John S. Torbert Tried to Force Way Into White House With Story.

John S. Torbert, 65 years old, of Laurel, Md., who attracted wide attention many years ago when he attempted to force his way in to see President Roosevelt to tell a story of a plot he had overheard to kidnap Alice Roosevelt, now Mrs. Longworth, wife of the Speaker of the House, died Friday night in a Philadelphia sanitarium, according to word received here yesterday.

He had overheard a white man offer two negroes $10,000 to kidnap the President's daughter, while he was in his room in a hotel in Alexandria, Torbert declared.

One of six brothers, who were skilled carpenters and builders, Torbert constructed many homes after his release from custody following that episode, but his mind gradually failed him and he was sent to the sanitarium. His surviving brother, William L. Torbert, now is critically ill at his home in Laurel.

UNKNOWN TROOPER OF CUSTER'S FORCE BURIED WITH HONOR

SEMICENTENNIAL ENDS WITH VOLLEY AND TAPS

Cross Placed on Battlefield Pending Erection of the Proposed Memorial.

Crow Agency, Mont., June 26 (By the Associated Press).—Homage of the nation today was paid to the heroes of the Indian campaigns when the body of an unidentified soldier who lost his life with Gen. George Armstrong Custer, was given all the honors of a United States military funeral after fifty years. With him into the grave went the tomahawk of White Bull, a subchieftain of the Sioux under Gall, directing genius of the allied tribes that annihilated the command of Custer at the battle of the Little Big Horn, June 25, 1876, a symbol, the chief explained, of his desire to show that enmity between the red man and the white man was at an end.

The body of the unknown soldier was uncovered a few days ago by a road construction crew, the buttons of an army uniform and the bullet which ended his life being the only means of identification.

Preceded by a riderless horse, the casket containing the remains of the unknown trooper was borne to the site of the proposed monument at Garryowen as the Seventh cavalry band played a funeral dirge. At the cemetery the regiment paid its final farewell honor and three volleys resounded through the concourse and the sound of taps died away.

Comrades Are Present.

The funeral was distinguished by reason of the fact that in addition to active pallbearers from the Seventh, eight members of Custer's Seventh who were engaged in the battle, where the trooper was killed, accompanied the casket to the grave.

Following the funeral Gen. E. S. Godfrey, a Custer veteran, as chairman of the Custer Memorial association, presided over the dedication of a great slab of granite which is to be a memorial to the Unknown Soldier.

As a concluding part of the three-day semicentennial observance of the battle of the Little Big Horn, Gen. Godfrey late today visited that portion of the battlefield where troops under Majs. Benteen and Reno made their stands and there placed a large cross which will mark the battlefield pending the erection of a proposed congressional memorial shaft.

MAN SLAIN; BURIED SECRETLY, IS CHARGE

Digging at Spot, However, Fails to Reveal Body, Despite Affidavit by Girl.

Saratoga Springs, N. Y., June 26 (By A. P.).—Whether Adrian B. Orton, Greenfield farmer, is buried as a murderer's victim on a mountain farm in Saratoga county, or is in a Chautauqua county grave, dead as the result of an accident years ago, was the problem which confronted authorities tonight.

An affidavit of a 16-year-old daughter of Mrs. Orton's, received from Rensselaer county authorities this afternoon, supported her mother's declaration that Orton was murdered and secretly buried by Fred La Point, also a Greenfield farmer. Edith La Point, the daughter, is one of six children of which La Point is said to be the father.

Mrs. Orton today took the police to the spot where she said her husband was buried, but excavations for the body proved fruitless. La Point, after pleading not guilty, was released in his own custody.

DAVIDSON'S RETURN TO CALIFORNIA ASKED

Requisition Upon Governor of Virginia for Extradition Issued.

Sacramento, June 26 (By A. P.). A requisition upon the governor of Virginia for extradition of William C. Davidson, alias William Caine, wanted in San Francisco on a forgery charge, was issued today by Gov. F. W. Richardson.

Davidson recently caused a flurry when he testified before the Senate election fraud committee in Washington that California banks were financing bootleggers. He is under arrest in Alexandria, Va., charged with having forged checks for $2,800 and $1,780, and with having obtained money under false pretenses.

Davidson, who was arrested in Alexandria recently where he was traced by Washington police, still is held in the Alexandria jail awaiting receipt of official demand for his extradition to California. His arrest was made at request of California authorities following his sensational testimony at the Capitol. He spoke from experience, he said. He has declared to Alexandria and Washington police that his arrest now is the result of spite and that his accusers were afraid to proceed against him in the past.

"The Young Men's Shop"
1319-1321 F Street

June 27 STORE NEWS Hours: 8 A.M. to 6 P.M.

Smallest "Mark-Up" in the U. S.

A nationally known clothing manufacturer, of Rochester, lately visited our shop. He was finishing a trip on which he had visited all the stores in this country handling his line, and a great many others.

We buy a great deal of clothing from him and of course he knows exactly their cost to us; also the approximate cost of our other lines of similar qualities.

He looked at suits made in his factory on which our original price mark was $45 and remarked that nearly every other shop handling them priced them at $50 and $55 at the opening of the spring season.

After careful inspection he declared our "mark-up," or margin of profit was smaller than that of any other clothing store he had visited.

Today we are able to give you $45 values for $25 because a backward season left manufacturers terribly overstocked. They loaded us "to the guards" with these fine spring suits because they HAD to be sold this year.

We're taking a loss on some of our first purchases, but the manufacturers are standing the big loss---and you are getting the benefit of it.

We still have a tremendous assortment of regular $45 lightweight, pure wool suits—hundreds with the extra pair of trousers.

The Sale Price is $25

They include all the lightest colors and new shades from our Spring stocks; also blue serges and blue unfinished worsteds.

Worn without the vest they make a most comfortable suit in even warmer weather than the present. They're perfect for fall wear. Think of the saving!

Hot Weather Clothing

No shop in Washington carries a more complete stock of the featherweight suits for comfort in hot weather. Lines are so extensive we can guarantee a perfect fitting. Walk in---find your size---and you're ready to go.

Palm Beach Suits (All the New Shades)	$15
New Striped Belgian Linens	$15—$18
Mohairs of Fine Quality	$20
Tropical Weight Worsteds	$25
Double-breasted Blue Flannel Coats	$18
White Flannel Trousers	$9
Striped Flannel Trousers	$10
White Linen Golf Knickers	$2.75

MONEY FOR PLAZA PARK MAY BE PUT IN DEFICIENCY BILL

COMMISSION TO MEET ON PROPOSAL TUESDAY

B. & O. Officials Have Been Invited to Make Formal Offer of Land.

An effort will be made to include an appropriation for the Capitol plaza project in the final deficiency bill, just getting underway in the House, it was learned yesterday.

The bill recently pasesd and signed by the President reviving the long dormant project, reappropriated $1,800,000, which is already in the Treasury to the credit of the project, but an additional $1,250,000 is necessary before the outstanding property can be acquired from the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.

The railroad is understood to have set a price on the property as a whole and it is regarded as unlikely that it may be purchased piecemeal.

A meeting was held yesterday by Vice President Dawes, Speaker of the House Longworth and David G. Lynn, Capitol architect, who compose the Capitol Grounds Enlargement commission. They are to meet again on Tesusday, at which time representatives of the railroad have been invited to appear and make a formal offer of the property.

May Be Condemned.

The course of the commission will be determined on the basis of the offer made. There is the possibility that the commission may seek to have the property condemned, thus taking a chance on an appraisal fixed by the courts, but there is understood to be a strong inclination to accept the offer which has been tentatively proposed at committee hearings. This offer, about $3,125,000, turns upon the court appraisal in 1913, plus interest and taxes and less the annual rental which the government has paid for the sites of the government hotels.

If the commission and railroad management agree on a price, an effort will be made to have all the money necessary made available at this session.

There is no chance of having the House include it in the final deficiency bill, but if the negotiations between the railroad representatives and the commission have reached a conclusion by the time the bill reaches the Senate, such additional funds as are necessary may be inserted by that body.

Heirs Take Up Claim Of Gold-Rush Days

An echo of the "days of '49" was heard at the War Department yesterday in a query from relatives of the late Francisco de la Guerra for information concerning the activities of Lieut. Col. John C. Fremont, in an effort to substantiate a claim against the government for loss of horses said to have been taken by Fremont when in command of United States troops in California in 1849-51.

Investigation showed that Lieut. Col. Fremont resigned from the army in 1848, and did not enter again until 1861. A further search of the so-called "California claims" during the period 1846-47, which were incurred by Lieut. Col. Fremont on his invasion of California, showed no record of claim filed by the Francisco de la Guerra family.

BROOKLAND CITIZENS URGING BUNKER HILL FORT FOR CITY PARK

Civic Association Renews Its Efforts to Have Site Transformed.

Peaceful human scenes and the aspect of rest will prevail on a site that once knew the thunder of cannon and whine of shells if the Brookland Citizens association succeeds in its effort to have the old Bunker Hill fort site, at Thirteenth and Otis streets northeast, made into a park—a goal it has been pursuing for 20 years.

The association has recently directed its efforts more forcibly along that line, especially since creation of the National Capital Park and Planning commission. A committee of the association, headed by C. B. Phelps, has the proposition in charge.

L. R. Wilson, secretary of the association, said yesterday that members of the committee have conferred with members of the commission in regard to the park plan, with the result that some have thought highly of the possibilities presented and others have reserved encouragement.

Level Ground Desired.

The rather precipitate slope of the site, it is explained, would in a measure contradict the plan of the commission to develop park areas as much as possible on level ground.

However, at the same time a possibility is presented of unusually beautiful development, it is pointed out. The site would lend itself, it is said, to the construction of artificial cascades, which would flow down from an elevated terrace. A wading pool could be placed at one end.

The fort site, according to Mr. Wilson, is practically in the same condition which the close of the civil war found it. It is overgrown with second growth chestnuts and pines, the chestnuts, however, being for the most part dead.

Breastworks Still Visible.

The old breastworks and trenches are still visible in fretted time-leveled ridges. The ground about the fort still affords occasional bullets. But the site is grown up in brushwood except for a few trees, and should be developed, the citizens of the community contend.

The site would hardly be in line with the boulevard with which it is planned to encircle the city; passing it through these old civil war fort areas, Mr. Wilson said.

The plan of the community, if the site is obtained for development, is to have a branch of the public library placed on one corner of the improved site and another place reserved for band concerts, according to Mr. Wilson. The association is endeavoring also to secure a branch library for the section.

Quantico Team Wins Marine Rifle Match

The trophy was presented yesterday by Maj. Gen. George F. Elliott, who retired as major general commandant in 1910, and who is referred to as "the father of modern rifle shooting in the marine corps." Members of the winning team are Capt. Eugene L. Mullaly, Pvt. Edward J. Moss, Second Lieut. Alan T. Hunt, Sergt. Carl J. Cagle and Corpl. Seth Wagonner.

CARDINALS LEAVING AS PILGRIM HOSTS GO FROM CHICAGO

Railways Still Taxed by the 1,000,000 or More Who Turn Homeward.

FAULHABER AND PIFFL AT SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

Catholic Students Mission Crusade Ritual Shown at Dayton Meeting.

Chicago, June 26 (By A. P.).—Most of the upward of 1,000,000 pilgrims to the twenty-eighth international eucharistic congress tonight had departed for their homes. With them by special trains went more than half of the cardinals, and most of the archbishops and other church dignitaries.

Cardinal Bonzano, papal legate will go to St. Louis to consecrate the new cathedral there early in the week and with him will go Cardinal O'Donnell, of Ireland, Cardinal Hayes, of New York; Cardinal Piffl, of Austria, and Cardinal von Faulhaber, of Germany.

Prelates In Springfield.

Cardinal O'Donnell tomorrow will visit the University of Notre Dame. Cardinals von Faulhaber and Piffl with Monsignor Seipel, former chancellor of Austria, went to Springfield today to participate in a German meeting there.

Cardinal Csernoch left today for Toledo and Cleveland. Cardinals Dubois and Charost have gone to Montreal, Cardinal Reig y Casanova, of Spain, has gone east and Cardinals Dougherty, of Philadelphia, and O'Connell, of Boston, both have departed.

Cardinal O'Donnell visited the Chicago stock yards today.

Mission Ritual Worked.

Dayton, Ohio, June 26 (By A. P.).—Exemplification of the Catholic students' mission crusade initiation ritual, featuring the threefold pledge of allegiance to the American flag, the crusade and the cross of Christ—in a setting of medieval pageantry tonight—marked the climax of the four-day national crusade convention. The ritual was staged in the University of Dayton stadium. Other events of the convention were held elsewhere on the university campus.

The convention opened last night with the bestowal by Bishop Brentman of the papal blessing on the crusade. The Pope recalled the deeds of the crusaders of old and compared them with the work of Catholic young people of today "in their spiritual warfare to win the world for Christ."

Cardinal Casanova Coming to Capital

Cardinal Reig y Casanova, primate of Spain, and one of the most notable figures at the Eucharistic congress, will visit Washington before returning to his own country.

The cardinal is believed to be the only living prelate of the Catholic Church who was once married. He is a widower, and prior to entering the religious life was one of the foremost lawyers and advocates in Spain. Upon the death of his wife his thoughts turned from law to spiritual subjects, and in a few months he began his studies for the priesthood.

Yale to Begin Work On 3 New Buildings

New Haven, Conn., June 26 (By A. P.).—Work on three new building projects will be started by Yale university next week. They are the new $6,000,000 Sterling Memorial library to occupy an entire block, a new recitation hall and a memorial to Yale graduates who lost their lives in the world war.

The Sterling Memorial library is a gift of the trustees of the estate of the late John W. Sterling, '64, of New York.

The recitation hall will be named in honor of the late William M. Harkness, '81.

The war memorial to the 227 graduates killed in the world war will take the form of a colonnade with an altar of liberty in the center. It was designed by Thomas Hastings, New York.

Pirating of Sermons Would Be Forbidden

New York, June 26 (By A. P.). No "pirating" of other minister's sermons unless credit is given, is one of the commandments proposed in a professional code of ethics for New York Presbyterian ministers.

The code, which was drafted by the New York Presbytery committee, will be submitted for approval at the fall meeting of the Presbytery of New York.

The code advises the ministers to keep physically fit, pay bills promptly, and take no side in church quarrels.

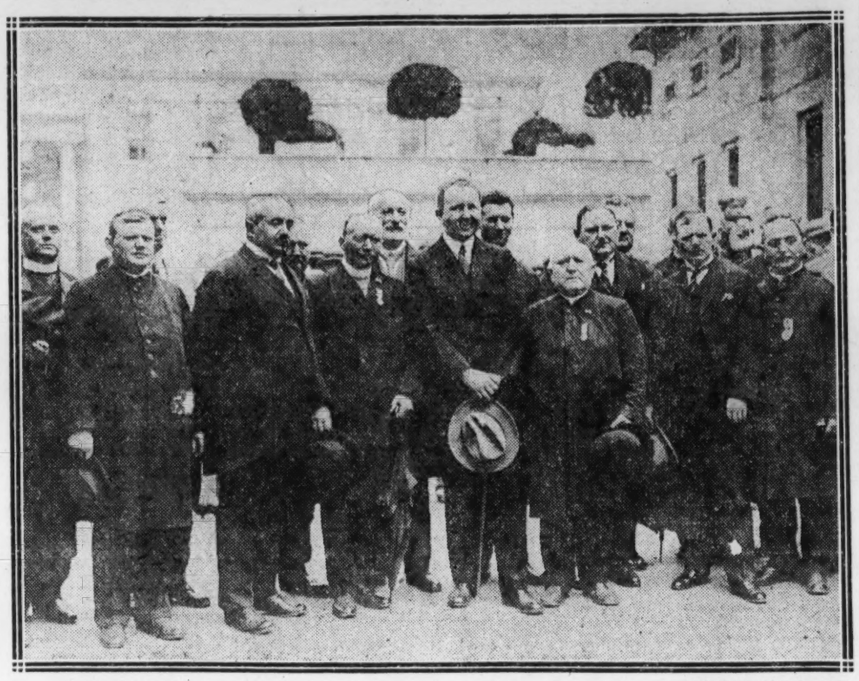

Former Husband Kills Wife of City Official

Cincinnati, Ohio, June 26 (By A. P.).—Mrs. Lillian Hammler, 38, wife of Eric Hammler, deputy city building commissioner, was shot to death today by her former husband, William Oliver, 50, an automobile mechanic, of Newport, Ky.

Oliver killed her in her home.

After shooting Mrs. Hammler, Oliver fired a bullet into his head and fell unconscious. He is in a critical condition.

IRISH DELEGATES HERE FOR THREE-DAY VISIT

Bishop Doorley Heads Eucharistic Group Touring Capital's Points of Interest.

LAUDS U. S. RECEPTION

Twenty-two members of the Irish delegation returning from the Eucharistic congress, arrived in the city yesterday for a three-day visit before their departure for the Emerald Isle. The party established their headquarters at the Willard hotel. The Most Rev. Bishop Edward Doorley, of Strokestown, County Roscommon, is at the head of the delegation.

The celerity of both persons and vehicles in the cities in the United States, which he has visited, impressed Bishop Doorley, contrasting strongly to the easy motion and quietness of the cities in his native land. New York, Boston and Chicago particularly impressed, he said, but what few glimpses he had of Washington, seemed more like home.

"Of the congress," Bishop Doorley said, "too much can not be said. It was wonderful. And the friendliness of the people in this country is wonderful. We were received well and treated nicely everywhere we went."

The party visited New York, Buffalo and Boston before going to the congress. Yesterday they went by boat for a visit to Mount Vernon, and today and tomorrow they plan to see other sights of Washington. Tomorrow they depart for Philadelphia, and from there to New York city, where they sail July 3 on the Steamship Republic for Ireland.

The party includes Miss E. Sullivan, professor in the University of Cork; the Rev. Jeremiah Fehily and the Rev. J. Ambrose, of County Cork; Miss M. McGinnis, of Dublin; District Court Judge J. M. Flood, of the Free State of Limerick; T. P. Walsh, of County Cork; the Rev. V. Walsh, of Bere island; the Rev. P. Cannon Ryan, of Tipperary; Mr. and Mrs. John Creagley, of Belfast; the Rev. J. Butler and the Rev. T. Cleary, of County Wexford; the Rev. J. Walsh and the Rev. M. Dowley, administrator of Waterford, of County Cork; the Rev. J. McCauley, of Belfast; the Rev. J. M. Routledge, of Manchester; the Rev. J. Browne, of County Kerry; Felix Kane, of Belfast; James McNally, of Monighan; the Rev. J. Mahony, of Dublin, and George E. O'Rourke, who is conducting the party.

ATTEMPT ON WILSON TOLD BY ARCHBISHOP

New York, June 26. — Twenty-four English delegates to the Eucharistic congress sailed today for home aboard the Red Star liner Belgenland, headed by Archbishop Frederick William Keating, second ranking Catholic prelate of Great Britain.

The archbishop disclosed in sailing what he described as an attempt to assassinate the late President Wilson during a parade up Fifth avenue in 1918, and expressed amazement that no account of it had appeared in newspapers at the time. He had viewed the attempt, he said, from the steps of the cathedral.

The parade moved up the avenue with the President at its head, afoot and apparently unescorted. The archbishop was marveling at his courage and the apparent lack of precautions for his safety when a man suddenly broke from the crowd, apparently planning assassination. Instantly, the archbishop said, detectives sprang up from everywhere, seizing the would-be assailant and hurrying him away.

The archbishop had nothing to add to previously given opinions of the Eucharistic congress, but again termed it "wonderful."

$3,000,000 HELD COST OF ILLINOIS PRIMARY

ment of huge sums to John H. Walker, president of the State Federation of Labor and Frank Farrington, another Illinois labor leader, and the activities of Dan Schuyler, associate of Samuel Ettleson and supposedly Insull's go-between, were only a few of the high spots of Senator Caraway's attack.

The demand for a prompt and complete investigation of the Illinois primary comes as a direct challenge to the Reed committee, it was admitted yesterday in the face of rumors that the Illinois situation might not be reached for months and then only in a perfunctory way. While he has shown no outward signs of weakening yet, Senator Reed, it is whispered, hesitates at embarrassing the election of Smith, an avowed antiworld-courter, and other reports have had it that Mr. Insull may escape an intensive cross-examination on his interest in the primary.

"The present senior senator from Illinois—McKinley—was head of one of the largest utility corporations in the State," continued Senator Caraway, coming down to the recent primary campaign, "and Samuel Insull was the real utility monarch, who is reputed to have poured millions into primary and election campaigns in the last few years.

"I am told that his contributions haven't always been made willingly but as he operated utility properties with a gross of over $100,000,000 a year he found it more profitable to 'come across' whenever he was asked than to refuse to pay and take his chance of losing millions in decreased rates at the hands of unfriendly public officials.

"I have been astonished to learn that the successful senatorial candidate in the recent Illinois Republican primary held on to his job as chairman of the utilities commission throughout his primary campaign and will do likewise during the campaign for election this fall.

"Small with the aid of his Chicago crowd, was reelected governor of Illinois 1924, notwithstanding the Supreme Court has decided he owes the State over $1,000,000 in interest on funds he had collected and retained on State money he had unlawfully used for his own gain while in his custody as treasurer of the State.

"I have been told that money was one of the chief commodities of trade and commerce in Illinois, during the recent Republican senatorial campaign. The unsuccessful candidate is charged with the expenditure of a million dollars, and the successful candidate, it is claimed, distributed at least twice as much.

"It is openly charged that being chairman of the utilities commission, the successful candidate received enormous contributions from the heads of the public utilities of the State, that Samuel Insull, either individually or through his utility organizations, contributed over $500,000; I have heard that a man named Messer, claiming direct authority from Insull offered nearly $100,000 in advertising to the foreign language newspapers of Chicago in return for their supporting Smith for Senator. I have been told they refused to sell out but I want to know the truth about it.

Caraway Charges "Silly," Declares Smith's Manager

Decatur, Ill., June 26 (By A. P.). Charges of Senator Caraway, of Arkansas, in the Senate today that Frank L. Smith, Republican candidate who defeated Senator McKinley, had spent $2,000,000 in his campaign were characterized here as "absolutely silly" by Allen F. Moore, campaign manager for Smith.

He also branded as false, the statement of Senator Caraway that E. H. Rollins & Sons, bankers, had contributed $100,000 to the Smith campaign funds, coincidal with the issuance of orders from the Illinois commerce commission affecting a $20,000,000 public utilities deal.

"I know nothing whatever of such a deal," Mr. Moore said. "No such amount as $2,000,000 ever went through my hands or the hands of any others in the Smith campaign committee in the interest of Smith's candidacy.

"I was one of the heaviest contributors to the Smith campaigns but I gave no such amount as $500,000, as Senator Caraway has charged. The senator has placed his decimal point one space too far to the right."

Mr. Moore said that Samuel Insull, Chicago utilities magnate, could speak for himself regarding contributions of $500,000 as charged by Senator Caraway.

McKinley Manager Calls Charge Gross Exaggeration

Chicago, June 26 (By A. P.).—Charges of Senator Caraway that Senator William B. McKinley spent $1,000,000 in his unsuccessful campaign for the Republican senatorial nomination were termed "a gross exaggeration" by Andrew Russell, manager for Senator McKinley, tonight.

"Senator Caraway's charge that we spent a million dollars is gross exaggeration,' he said. "Nothing like that amount was spent. If the senate wishes to investigate we gladly will submit books and figures to disprove the charges.'

Col. Frank L. Smith, successful Republican nominee, and whose organization Senator Caraway said spent $2,000,000 is ill in a hospital here and could not be questioned.

Samuel Insull, public utilities head, who was mentioned by Senator Caraway as a heavy contributor to Col. Smith's fund, could not be reached tonight.

ABDUCTOR OF FAMILY IS SLAIN BY POSSEMAN

Bankrupt Oklahoma Merchant Seizes Store Receiver, His Wife and Son.

WOMAN AND BOY FREED

Coalgate, Okla., June 26 (By A. P.).—Emmet Bales, abductor of John Simpson, wholesale merchant, was shot and killed tonight by a member of the sheriff's force that surrounded the house in which Bales held Simpson a prisoner.

Members of a posse led by Fred Sherman, sheriff of Coal county, had entered the house in an attempt to make Bales surrender peacefully. Sherman said Bales was shot by one of the possemen when he reached for his gun. The sheriff refused to say who did the shooting.

Bales' death brought to an end a day of harrowing experiences for Simpson, his wife and 9-year-old son, who were kidnaped and held prisoner earlier in the day. Bales, a grocer at Tupelo, Okla., who failed in business was seeking to force collection of $15,000 which he alleged Simpson owed him.

The Simpson boy escaped and notified Sheriff Fred Sherman of his parents' plight. Bales later released Mrs. Simpson.

Members of the posse, fearful for Simpson's safety, did not fire on the house, which is the home of George Trice, Bales' attorney. Trice was not in Coalgate and Bales had announced his intention of keeping Simpson in the house until the lawyer returned.

Simpson was receiver for Bales' store, Mrs. Simpson said after she was released that Bales forced her husband to sign a check for $15,000 while they were imprisoned in the farmhouse today, and declared he would keep Simpson in custody until the check was cashed.

Doctors of national reputation are on the program, among them being M. W. Ireland, surgeon general of the army; Edward R. Stitt, surgeon general of the navy; Dr. Pedro N. Oritz, commissioner of health, Porto Rico; Dr. Claude A. Burnett, dean of the New York Homeopathic Medical college and two experts in the new specialty, "aviation medicine," Commander Robert G. Davis of the navy and Maj. L. H. Bauer of the army.

SIMPLIFIED SPELLING OF 12 WORDS PROPOSED

National Education Body Will Consider Suggestion, Dr. Crabtree Asserts.

PROHIBITION IS UPHELD

Philadelphia, June 26 (By A. P.). Proposal to simplify the spelling of twelve words will come before educators of the country next week, it was predicted tonight by Dr. J. W. Crabtree, of Washington, D. C. Dr. Crabtree is secretary of the National Education association, which will hold its sixty-fourth annual convention here, beginning Monday. Twelve thousand teachers, many of whom have arrived, are expected to attend.

The words and the proposed form of spelling are: Tho, altho, thru, thruout, thorofare, thoroly, program, catalog, decalog, pedagog and prolog. The association in 1921 decided to discontinue the use of simplified spelling.

Discussing prohibition, Dr. Crabtree denounced the "infamous doctrines" of two widely known educators, Dr. Arthur T. Hadley, president emeritus of Yale university, and Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia university, who are opponents of prohibition.

Declaring the views of these educators are not those of the rank and file of the nation's educators, Dr. Crabtree said.

"Dr. Hadley is not speaking for the teaching profession when he attacks the eighteenth amendment. The teachers in our association have declared repeatedly for enforcement of the Constitution and the laws. Dr. Hadley's attitude strikes at the very heart of the nation's stability. He and Dr. Butler and certain others who advocate infamous doctrines do not in any way represent the thought of school teachers."

Ziegfeld Says Stage Must Be Cleaned Up

New York, June 26 (By A. P.).—Florenz Ziegfeld, who admits he imported the vogue of stage nudity, now says he is so disgusted with its development in the hands of "less artistic producers" that he is going to lead a campaign for more clothes in glorification of the American girl on the stage.

In a statement deploring the "daring and coarseness" of present exploiters on Broadway, the theatrical producer says the stage must be cleaned. Although he says he was the first producer to stage nudity in New York city, he did it artistically, he avows, with no immodesty intended.

HUNGARY THANKS SMITH FOR FINANCIAL FREEDOM

American Controller Guest of Cabinet Deputies and Judges at Banquet.

U. S. ALSO IS PRAISED

Budapest, Hungary, June 26 (By A. P.).—Members of the Hungarian cabinet, deputies, judges and high representatives of the church attended a banquet tonight in honor of Jeremiah Smith, of Boston, who recently completed his task as financial controller of Hungary under the League of Nations.

Count Bethlen, the Hungarian premier, declared that it was due to Mr. Smith's untiring work and unfailing confidence in the nation's resources that Hungary had gained its financial freedom.

"Our gratitude," he added, "must of necessity also be offered to the United States. I hope that the great democracy will not withdraw from our sorely-tried country, which, although small in numbers and poor in economic resources, has given striking proof of its will to live as a free and equal member in the community of nations."

Mr. Smith avowed that his two years' work in behalf of Hungary was only one evidence of the intense desire of the United States to help all the countries of Europe which had suffered in the war and which had shown a genuine desire to put their economic households in order.

He expressed his confidence in Hungarian resources and fiscal policy, and the earnestness and integrity of its statesmen.

WIDOW WANTS GEMS IN FITZSIMMONS' TEETH

Chicago, June 26 (By A. P.).—Telling a story of poverty, a woman who said she was the widow of Bob Fitzsimmons, once world heavyweight champion pugilist, requested permission of Superintendent of Police Collins to exhume Fitzsimmons' body to reclaim diamonds which he had set in his teeth.

Lou Houseman, theater manager and friend of the late prizefighter, said he believed the widow wanted the diamonds as keepsakes, as they were not of great value. The last time he had heard of Fitzsimmons' widow, he said, was a year and a half ago in southern France.

Superintendent Collins said his caller left no address, but said she would call in a week. Collins said he would refer her request to the corporation counsel.

REPUBLICAN SENATE POWER THREATENED IN FALL ELECTIONS

FARM AND DRY ISSUES WORRY CAMPAIGNERS

G. O. P. Internal Strife Creates Much Concern in Old Guard Ranks.

By ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.

Recent developments have greatly increased the danger of losing control of the Senate, which the Republican party is facing in the congressional elections next November.

The House now appears to be reasonably assured to the Republicans, but it will be little short of a miracle if they succeed in preserving a majority in the Senate.

The party in power is beset by more than the usual number and variety of adverse factors in an off-year election. In addition to the customary reaction against the dominant party in the midterm elections there is dissatisfaction in the traditionally Republican agricultural States with the Republican record on farm relief legislation, and there is division in the party on the prohibition issue.

Not only do the Democrats stand an excellent chance of regaining Senate seats won by the Republicans in the Harding landslide in normally Democratic States, but, with party lines going to smash in some States on the question of modifying the Volstead act, wet Democratic candidates for the Senate may carry some normally Republican States.

Greatest Fight in Years.

It now is apparent that the election will be one of the most critical struggles between the two great parties in many years. If the Republicans, in spite of their heavy handicaps, should succeed in retaining control of the Senate, as well as the House, the prestige of the G. O. P. would be enormously enhanced, while that of the Jeffersonians would drop pretty close to zero. For it would mean that the Democrats could not win, with the cards all in their favor, and raise the question of their ability to make an effective bid for the Presidency in 1928.

If the Democrats should win the Senate, if not the House, they would gain in party prestige and would be inspired with high hopes of staging a spectacular comeback in 1928. With one chamber of Congress in their power the Democrats would be able to veto legislation proposed by President Coolidge, and with both houses controlled either outright or through coalition with insurgent Republicans the opposition party might embarrass the administration prodigiously by passage of tariff revision and other legislation, which even if vetoed, would furnish a foundation for Democratic bid for power in 1928.

Has Present Majority.

The Senate is now composed of 55 Republicans, 40 Democrats and 1 Farmer-labor senator, Mr. Shipstead, of Minnesota. A loss of seven seats would leave the Republicans one short of a majority, unless all elected as Republicans and Senator Shipstead were to join in organizing the Senate. Even then, with six or seven Republicans classed as irregular and voting as often with the Democrats as with their party, the G. O. P. would not be assured of control of legislation. And there is no assurance that Smith W. Brookhart, if elected in Iowa, and Senator Frazier, of North Dakota, both of whom the Senate Republicans read out of the party, would vote with the regulars to organize the Senate.

The House is now composed of 247 Republicans, 183 Democrats and 5 independents. A loss of approximately 30 seats on paper would entail loss of control of the body—actually less than that number, as the Wisconsin and some other insurgents would regain the balance of power they held in the last Congress.

There are 34 senators to be elected in November. Of these contested seats, 27 are now held by Republicans and 7 by Democrats. The seven Democratic seats are all in the solid South and their retention is assured. The battle is wholly on ground now held by Republicans. The Democrats have everything to win and nothing to lose; the Republicans everything to lose and nothing to gain. That the Republicans will lose some seats appears a certainty. How many is the question.

Democrats' Opportunity.

The predicament of the Republicans is seen at a glance when it is stated that with the loss of seven seats endangering control of the Senate there are 14 of the 27 Republican seats which the Democrats have a fair chance of winning, according to present indications. In the case of nearly all of these fourteen seats the contest will be a bitter one and the outcome in doubt until the votes are counted. These fourteen seats, together with the name of Republican nominee or incumbent and the dates of the primary yet to be held follow:

Iowa—Smith W. Brookhart, nominee.

Missouri—Senator George H. Williams, incumbent, August 3.

Kentucky—Senator Richard P. Ernst, incumbent, August 7.

Ohio—Senator Frank B. Willis, incumbent, August 10.

California—Senator Samuel M. Shortridge, incumbent, August 31.

Nevada—Senator Tasker L. Oddie, incumbent, September 7.

New Hampshire—Senator George H. Moses, incumbent, September 7.

Arizona—Senator Ralph H. Cameron, incumbent, September 7.

Massachusetts—Senator William M. Butler, incumbent, September 7.

Maryland—Senator O. E. Weller, incumbent, September 8-15.

New York—Senator James W. Wadsworth, jr., incumbent, September 30.

Idaho—Senator Frank R. Gooding, incumbent, convention.

One of the biggest elements of uncertainty for the Republicans is furnished by the spreading sentiment in favor of modification of the national prohibition law to enable the several States to define intoxicating liquor.

Illinois is an overwhelmingly Republican State, yet such is the reaction against bone-dry prohibition that George Brennan, Democratic candidate for the Senate on a modification platform, may defeat Col. Frank Smith, the Republican nominee, who will have the support of the drys.

It is already apparent party lines will be considerably bent, if not broken, in the Illinois balloting. Brennan will receive an enormous wet Republican vote, chiefly in Chicago, East St. Louis, Peoria, Joliet and other cities, while dry Democrats who place prohibition above party will support Smith.

In New York Senator Wadsworth is assured of renomination, but is far from certain of reelection. The drys have organized a bolt from the Republican ticket in support of former State Senator Cristman, independent dry candidate for senator. The Democratic candidate is yet to be selected, but that he will be as wet as Wadsworth is a certainty. Here, also, party lines will not count for much in November, as drys expect to elect their candidate for senator through division of the wets between Wadsworth and the Democratic nominee. Wadsworth expects to win through flivvering of the dry bolt up-State, where he is particularly strong. The Democrats see a chance to gain a Senate seat through the splitting of the Republican party by the dry bolt.

Wet Issue in Missouri.

Prohibition is the paramount issue in both the Republican and Democratic primary campaigns in Missouri. Senator Williams has dry opposition in the Republican primary. Congressman Hawes is seeking the Democratic nomination for senator on a wringing wet platform and has dry rivals.

In Ohio, modification is an issue that will determine the Democratic nomination. The wet candidate is former Senator Atlee Pomerene. His dry opponent in the primary is a woman, Florence E. Allen, associate justice of the State supreme court. If Pomerene wins there will be a spectacular battle over the modification question between him and Senator Willis, who presumably will be renominated and who is as dry as the Antisaloon league. Defeat of Willis by Pomerene would project the latter into the 1928 campaign as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for President.

Oklahoma, Kentucky, Nevada, Arizona and Maryland are normally doubtful States. Kentucky, for the first time, has two Republican senators, the others a Republican and Democrat each. The Republicans will be hard put to it to hold the Oklahoma and Maryland seats and might easily lose the others, too.

In Massachusetts the Republican cry will be to support the President by returning his close friend and political manager, Senator Butler, chairman of the Republican national committee. The Democrats, however, will have a forceful and popular candidate in the person of former Senator David I. Walsh, and they will have a good chance to win. The world court as well as prohibition will be an issue in this as in other States, where senators who voted for the world court resolution are seeking reelection. Butler will be compelled to defend his vote for the court, with Walsh a militant anticourt opponent. The prohibition lines have not been drawn, but if Butler runs wet, Walsh will run wetter.

Warfare in G. O. P. Ranks.

In Iowa the situation depends on whether the Republican factions bury the hatchet and support Brookhart. If they do Brookhart will win, otherwise the Democrats may elect their candidate for senator through Republican defection, as the the Senate decided they had elected Senator Steck over Brookhart in 1924.

There is internal warfare in the Republican party in California, where the Hiram Johnson wing is opposing the renomination of Senator Shortridge. The latter voted for the world court and supported the nomination of Wallace McCamant, of Oregon, for appointment to the Federal bench. The appointment of McCamant, whom Johnson accused of treachery to him in the 1920 national convention, angered the California senator. He set out to defeat the nomination and succeeded, and he has not forgiven Shortridge for crossing him in this and other matters. The Johnson candidate against Shortridge is Robert N. Clarke, of Los Angeles. The Democrats are talking of putting up former Senator James D. Phelan, and are counting on Republican schism for success in the election.

Idaho Republicans are split over the renomination of Senator Gooding. He voted for the world court and hence is unacceptable to the supporters of Senator Borah (Republican, Idaho). Gooding has two opponents for the nomination, Attorney General Albert H. Connor and former Attorney General J. H. Peterson. Even if Gooding should be renominated he will be up against a hard fight for his seat with the Democratic candidate, who will be former Senator John F. Nugent, who has always commanded considerable support among progressive Republicans.

G. O. P. LAUNCHES CAMPAIGN TO HOLD SEATS IN CONGRESS

Phipps Tells Senate Party Will Fight on Propriety Platform.

CITES TAX REDUCTION AND DEBT PAYMENTS

Indorses Republican Moves in Farm Questions and Promises Relief Plan.

(By the Associated Press.)

The campaign for the reelection of a Republican Congress this fall, was formally launched yesterday in the Senate by Senator Phipps, of Colorado, chairman of the Republican senatorial committee.

He declared the Republican party would rest its case before the people in this campaign, "upon the proof that prior to its assumption of power industrial conditions were in sad contrast to what they are now; that its principles are such in themselves as to create good times out of bad ones; that its record demonstrates that its principles did achieve this result, and that the aims of its opponents are such as to menace our prosperity if made effective by power."

Senator Phipps and other members of the senatorial committee had a breakfast conference Friday with President Coolidge and it was decided to fire the opening gun in the campaign with a review of what the party had done since coming to power after the world war.

Accomplishments Cited.

As some of the accomplishments, the senator pointed to enactment of the 1922 tariff act, the reduction of taxes by $1,650,000,000, the refunding of most of the war debts, the practice of economy in government expenditures, and the appropriation of large sums for the care of world war veterans. He contended that all these had combined to bring about general prosperity, with American wage earners enjoying higher wages, greater purchasing power and higher standards of living than exist anywhere in the world.

Turning to the farm question, with which the Senate is wrestling, he said that compared to the European tillers of the soil, the American farmer lives in comfort.

"He is a business man," he added, "and, as in every other business, he has his good times and his bad times—good times under a protective tariff and bad times under the lack of it. The general tariff bill of 1922 included protective rates on all of the farm staples which had been subjected to ruinous competition of cheaply produced foreign staples. This was the first tariff bill which really extended a fair measure of protection to the produce of our farms.

Purchasing Power Higher.

"A protective duty was placed upon the principal products the farmer has to sell, while no duty was levied on the articles mostly used by him. What was the result to the farmer? The purchasing power of the farmer's dollar has increased from 69 in 1921 to 89 in 1926, taking the year 1914 as the basis of 100. On the other hand, the index number of farm prices has increased from 16 to 147, a gain of 31 per cent, while the index number of nonagricultural commodities, which the farmer has to buy, has decreased from 167 to 165. The prices of raw farm staple products have advanced markedly since 1921.

"This year our farmers seem assured of bumper crops at good prices. Would the farmer give up the protection he has received, especially in view of the fact that a Republican Congress is seeking to work out on a sound basis an extension of cooperative methods, and has already regulated grain exchanges extended to the farmers $500,000,000 in rural credits through the war finance corporation, authorized cooperative marketing without conflict with the Sherman law, extended control over the packing industry, placed a farmer on the Federal Reserve Board, and increased the rate of interest on farm loan bonds so as to make them more easily marketable?"

Dockweiler Chosen To Run for Senate

Fresno, Calif, June 26 (By A. P.).—The Democratic State primary conference, organized at Santa Cruz last month, reconvened today and indorsed a ticket headed by David S. Ewing, of Fresno, for governor and national committeeman and Isadore B. Dockweiler, of Los Angeles, for United States senator.

Ewing asked a few days, to determine whether I should be egotistical enough to accept this at your hands. Dockweiler is in Washington. He will notify the party promptly whether or not he accepts, his son, John Dockweiler, said.

Pharmacists Oppose Dispensing Whisky

(By the Associated Press.)

A resolution recently adopted by the Kentucky Pharmaceutical association asking that pharmacists in that State "be relieved of the privilege of dispensing whisky" on prescriptions, was presented to the Senate yesterday by Senator Sackett (Republican), Kentucky.

"Former saloonkeepers, ex-policemen and other nonprofessionals have entered our honorable calling for the only purpose of dispensing whisky in violation of the law and for unlawful gain," the resolution said.

DEMOCRATS URGED BY UPSHAW TO TAKE DRY STAND IN 1928

Calls on House to Support the Eighteenth Amendment, in House Debate.

ANDREWS IS ASSAILED AS CRINGING OFFICIAL

Director Seeks to Please the Drys and Wets, LaGuardia Says.

(By Associated Press)

Indulging in one of its favorite pastimes of the present session, the House yesterday participated in a round of prohibition debate.

Consideration of the second deficiency supply bill, which among other items carries $2,686,700 to supplement the $10,635,000 already provided for prohibition enforcement during the fiscal year beginning July 1, served as the vehicle for bringing up the subject.

While representative Gorman (Republican), Illinois, and LaGuardia (Progressive-Socialist), New York, vigorously assailed the dry law and conditions under it, Representative Upshaw (Democrat), Georgia, urged his party to come out with a "ringing" pronouncement in support of the eighteenth amendment in the 1928 presidential campaign.

Responsible for Crime.

Mr. Gorman charged prohibition with a grave responsibility in recent crime waves in his home city of Chicago, while Mr. La Guardia concentrated his attack on Lincoln C. Andrews, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, who is in charge of prohibition enforcement.

Asssailing Andrews as a "typical, cringing officeholder who is seeking to please the administration, the drys and the wets," La Guardia shouted that the proposed distribution of the 235 additional dry agents to be employed under the new appropriation "is not to prevent liquor coming into the country, but to facilitate the entry and to give concessions at certain ports for that very purpose."

Mr. Upshaw reviewed the last presidential election, accused President Coolidge of not taking a definite stand on the Ku Klux Klan, and said the Democrats had been afflicted with "too much Madison Square Garden."

Once a Letter Carrier.

Comparing conditions in Chicago as he knew them as a letter carrier eight years ago with those at present, Mr. Gorman said that his route lay in an "orderly community," but now "there is much crime."

"Young boys and girls," he said, "in the days I traveled there, now grown into early manhood and womanhood, instead of drinking beer in their own homes, as was the custom of their parents, now drink poison at house parties, dances, cabarets and elsewhere.

"There is more drunkenness among these young people today than there was among the adults of eight years ago when I worked in their midst. The girls who don't drink strong liquors are rare exceptions, and they all whiff that eternal companion of drink, the cigarette.

"These simple people are no better off since prohibition. They are worse off. For the most part, they were a temperate people before prohibition. Now they are a community of drinkers. They make their own home brew and they distill their own booze, strong, vile and unaged concoctions that are destructive to the membranes of the human body. They drink it now with glee and noise because the law says they can not drink it."

Mr. Gorman urged wets and drys to "compromise a little" and adjust the standard of prohibition so that people who desire it may have 2.75 per cent beer, in place "of the poison they are now consuming."

Upshaw Wants "Sober" States.

Mr. Upshaw asserted that in the 1928 presidential race the Democratic program, "both in platform and in candidate," should demand strict observance of the eighteenth amendment.

"This militant program," he said, "will win for the Democratic party—and nothing else will."

He told the House that the Democrats wanted New York, New Jersey and other Eastern States, but wanted them "sober," adding that if the Democratic donkey ever expects to graze on the refreshing verdure of the White House lawn, he must not stop too long in the big "wet" pastures.

La Guardia charged Gen. Andrews with striving "for enforcement without unduly distributing the lawbreakers," and said the general's recent testimony before a House appropriations subcommittee in support of the additional prohibition funds has been misleading.

Representative Hill, of Maryland, said the national drink in America had become "alcohol and water, with some kind of flavor," and asked what Jefferson, Madison and Hamilton would have thought of a Federal government that proposed organization of an "under-cover squad to spy" on State officials.

He engaged in a colloquy with Representative Denison (Republican), Illinois, as to the advisability of the beer squad, Denison asking what else could be done when it was found that State officials in some sections conspire against the Federal dry law.

Hill, in turn, asked Denison if he knew of creation of a Federal "under-cover squad" to enforce any other law, and the Illinois member said he did not.

"Here we have the Federal government employing under-cover agents to spy on officers of the 48 States," said Hill, "and the State may employ under-cover agents to spy on Federal officials—that's a pretty situation."

DAY IN CONGRESS

SENATE.

Met at noon, June 26, and recessed at 6 o'clock p. m. until tomorrow at 12 o'clock.

Senator Phipps (Republican), of Colorado, chairman of senatorial campaign committee, delivered a prepared political speech in which he devoted much attention to the tariff.

Senator Watson (Republican), of Indiana, withdrew his motion to lay aside all farm relief legislation with the statement that when the motion was made he did not know "the President favored the Fess plan farm relief."

Farm relief legislation was laid aside until tomorrow and bill to extend time of veterans' rehabilitation act, which expires July 1, was taken up but not concluded.

Senator Caraway (Democrat), of Arkansas, charged that $3,000,000 had been spent by Republican senatorial candidates in Illinois and demanded a searching investigation. Chairman Reed (Democrat), of special committee, giving assurance that this would be done after adjournment.

Senator Ashurst (Democrat) of Arizona, told the Senate he would demand an investigation of treatment of tubercular and disabled soldiers at Atlanta and Leavenworth Federal prisons.

Joseph K. Crupper, of Alexandria, was nominated to be collector of customs for the Norfolk (Va.) district.

District committee favorably reported House bill to regulate the practice of chiropractic.

Foreign relations committee submitted report on protocol of treaty to prohibit use in war of asphyxiating, poisonous, or other gases, and of bacteriological methods.

Under terms of a resolution by Senator Harreld (Republican), of Oklahoma, the Attorney General would be directed to inform Senate on number of cases brought by the government in which citizens have been indicted outside their own States or districts and taken to other States or districts for trial.

Postoffice committee favorably reported a bill to provide for weekly pay days for postal employes.

Senators Greene and Dale, of Vermont, and Bingham, of Connecticut, were designated as members of a commission to represent Senate at celebration of one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of independence of Vermont and battle of Bennington.

Responding to Caraway resolution, Secretary Jardine has advised Senate that at no time has he been connected in any manner with College of Scientific Forecasting, and that it is not possible for the department to forecast future markets of grain, and has no information that would make such forecasts possible.

Committee investigating senatorial primary campaign expenditures sent its own accountant to Ohio to inspect books of national organization of Antisaloon league and obtain financial data covering last ten years.

HOUSE.

Met at noon, June 26, and adjourned at 4:35 p. m. until tomorrow at 11 o'clock.

Began general debate on the second deficiency appropriation bill.

Discussing item for prohibition enforcement, Mr. LaGuardia, of New York, charged that Treasury Department is deceiving American people on enforcement.

Mr. Upshaw, Democrat, of Alabama, addressed the House on future of the Democratic party.

Retiring chief of engineers, Maj. Gen. Henry Taylor transmitted a recommendation for abandonment of 123 river and harbor projects, some of which date back many years.

Mr. Collier, Democrat, of Mississippi, introduced bill to reduce tariff on cotton manufactures.

INDEPENDENCE WEEK THROUGHOUT NATION BEGINS TOMORROW

Capital Will Join in Celebration When Philadelphia Mayor Tolls Bell.

J. M. BECK TO SPEAK AT CONTINENTAL HALL

National observance of the 150th anniversary of American independence and the centennial of the death of Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence, will begin tomorrow throughout this broad domain when Maj. W. Freeland Kendrick, of Philadelphia, rings the Liberty Bell at 11:11 a. m.

The sound from the historic bell will be transmitted to all quarters of the globe by radio and it will be the signal inaugurating the memorial week ending July 5. The official plan for the nation-wide celebration calls for participation in the nation's birthday exercises by citizens in every city, town, village and hamlet in this country.

The plan was drawn up by the sesquicentennial of American independence and the Thomas Jefferson centennial commission of the United States created by a joint resolution of the House and Senate adopted and approved by the President, April 26, 1926.

President Coolidge is honorary chairman of the commission which maintains offices at 26 Jackson place, this city. Through the efforts of this commission the entire country has been advised in detail as to what the week's program will be.

Patriot's Pledge of Faith Day.

The opening day of "American Independence Week" coming tomorrow has been designated "Patriot's Pledge of Faith Day." The other days in the week as named by the commission follow: Tuesday, "Universal Education Day;" Wednesday, "Founders' Day;" Thursday, "Greater America Day;" Friday, "Signers' Day," Saturday, "Monticello Day;" Sunday, "Jefferson Centennial Day;" and Monday, "Sesquicentennial Independence Day."

James M. Beck, former solicitor general of the Department of Justice, will deliver the patriotic address at the exercises to be held in the Memorial Continental hall here tomorrow morning at 10:30 o'clock. The program is to be given under the auspices of the National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution, and Mrs. Alfred J. Brosseau, of New York city, president general, will preside. Mr. Beck in his address will stress not only the influence of Jefferson, but also that of John Adams, who worked with Jefferson in drafting the Declaration of Independence.

Salute to the Flag.

The United States Marine Band orchestra will open the program with patriotic music and the Scriptures will be read by Mrs. Rhett Goode, past chaplain general. The flag ceremony will follow and the colors will be presented by a body of sergeants of the regular army. The salute to the flag will be led by Mrs. Herbert M. Lord, after which "The Star-Spangled Banner" will be sung by Mrs. Flora McGill Keefer. As the strains of this anthem die away, the bells, symbolizing the Liberty Bell will be rung. The program has been timed so that this will take place at 11:11 a. m., when bells throughout the entire country will ring in echo to the famous Liberty Bell, which will be rung at the same hour in Philadelphia by Mayor Kendrick.

The audience will then recite the American creed under the leadership of its author, William Tyler Page, clerk of the House of Representatives. The entire program will be broadcast by station WCAP.

The chimes of the Epiphany Episcopal church, Mount St. Alban, and the Metropolitan Methodist church are to be rung at 11:11 a. m. The sesquicentennial commission has requested that bells on all churches, schools, boats and fire-engine houses in the United States be rung at this hour tomorrow.

Address of President.

In the "Address to the American People," by President Coolidge, issued by the sesquicentennial commission, of which he is honorary head, the President said:

"It is a happy coincidence that the American people can renew their fidelity to the elemental principles of the Declaration of Independence, while according to its author the recognition due him by virtue of the services enumerated, on the sesquicentennial of the one and the centennial of the other.

"To this end, the commission, by virtue of the authority vested in it by congressional action, has arranged a program for a nation-wide celebration commencing June 28 and ending July 5 this year, this period to be known as "American Independence Week." The details of the program are attached to this address to the American people, and the commission, by virtue of the same authority, urges that in every community arrangements be made for a proper observance of these two anniversaries. Through the cooperation of State and municipal officials, and patriotic, civic, business and fraternal societies, it is confidently believed that the celebrations of this year will result in a rededication of the American people to the ideals and principles which brought the republic into existence."

HISTORICAL PAGEANT BY COLORED SCHOOL LESSON TO CHILDREN

"SPIRIT OF '76" BASIS FOR COLONIAL DRAMA

Class at Garnet-Patterson Graduated Amid Patriotic Scenes.

History teaching through dramatization, in connection with a graded school commencement, was exemplified in skillful fashion Wednesday at the Suburban gardens, when the Garnet-Patterson school staged on the large pavilion "The Story of American Independence." In the pageant ensemble were more than 1,000 colored school children, who had journeyed to the scene of action by motor bus caravan.

The presentation was introduced by Lorelle Murray, who, through exposition of a series of elaborately costumed living pictures, created the atmosphere of the Spirit of '76. A social event typical of life in the colonies before serious trouble arose with England was shown in an episode depicting a reception to Col. George Washington, at Annapolis, in December, 1772, done by pupils of 8-A grade.

Groups of ladies and gentlemen from neighboring towns and plantations did honor to the Virginia colonel, and Mistress Martha Washington, in which roles were cast Richard Payne and Araminta Dickerson. The Virginia reel and the stately minuet were featured.

Boston Tea Party Depicted.

Another scene by pupils of the fourth and fifth grades showed development of the "Boston Tea Party" from discussion in a New England town meeting in December, 1773, at the Old South Meetinghouse in Boston. Overton Murray was cast as Samuel Adams, Raymond Weir as the owner of the first tea ship, Melvin Madison as John Hancock and Paul Johnson as an Indian chieftain. Brilliantly colored costume effects, of social as well as historical significance, were shown by pupils, who represented citizens of Boston, Mohawk Indians, British redcoats and members of famous "party."

Of more serious vein was the faithful portrayal of the First, Second and Third Continental Congresses showing the growth of the spirit of independence in the hearts and minds of the New England colonists. Pupils of grade 8-B, representing September of the year 1774, gathered in a setting minutely illustrative of Carpenter's hall, Philadelphia, Ernest Tomlinson, presiding as Peyton Randolph, with Julian Armstead as his secretary, Charles Thomson.

Patrick Henry, at that time lukewarm on the question of independence, was exemplified by William Jackson, and John Adams, more aggressive, by Wilbur Cyrus. Rudolph Williams appeared as Roger Sherman, and the Rev. George A. Parker as the Rev. Mr. Duche. The atmosphere of Toryism was predominant. Colonial dames and members of Congress paraded in a fashion show were rendered vivid by mannerisms of the youthful thespians.

Tory Sympathy Portrayed.

An interlude and a Tory song shifted the scene to Gen. Gage's camp on the plains of Boston in mid-October of the same year. Pupils of grade 6, as Tory sympathizers and British soldiery, engaged in a dance of derision, setting forth in superb mimicry the arrogance of redcoats and the aloofness of Americans loyal to the crown.

Martial music, by a student orchestra, indicated the grim character and determination of the session. The conversion of Patrick Henry into an ardent patriot in the summer of 1776, aligning himself for the declaration with Thomas Jefferson, Richard Henry Lee, John Hancock, John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Samuel Adams and others, elicited prolonged and vociferous applause from the youthful audience.

Washington's Headquarters Shown.

Here Alvin Douglass was cast as Jefferson, Clarence Macdonald as Franklin, and Harold Tibbs as Robert Morris, who, with Charles Shumate as Edward Rutledge, was against issuance of the declaration. Another scene showed Washington's headquarters in '76, and featured his address to the Continental army. The Declaration of Independence itself, was presented to the accompaniment of well modulated, but stirring musical strains indicative of the spirit of a free America.

Lieut. Col. West A. Hamilton presided. The address to the graduating class was made by J. Francis Gregory, of the Miner Normal school. Thomas L. Jones, assistant District attorney, and other visitors complimented K. C. Lewis, principal, and teachers on the success of the presentation. The loving cup recently won by the Garnet-Patterson school, in the elementary schools' dramatic carnival, was presented by Miss M. P. Shadd, assistant superintendent, and accepted for the pupils by Paul Johnson, of grade 8.

Livingstone Seniors Are Given Diplomas

Livingstone Academy of Arts and Sciences awarded diplomas to 70 graduates, Thursday evening, at commencement exercises in the auditorium of the school. Eliot H. Thomson, publicity director of the Washington Loan & Trust Co., delivered an address to the graduating class on the topic "Pictography as a psychological factor."

Brief addresses were also made by Harry Campbell, head of the commercial art department, and John M. Goodwin, head of the interior decoration and architectural drafting department. Speakers were presented by Eugene T. Dickinson, president of the academy, who presided. Diplomas were awarded by Mrs. Jessica Livingstone Dickinson. The faculty gold medal was given to Laura K. Hinckley, of Williamsport, Pa., for perfect attendance and extraordinary effort.

ACCOUNTING METHOD GAINING MUCH FAVOR

New Retail Inventory Plan Is Highly Praised by Merchants Using It.

IS HELD MOST EFFICIENT

A relatively new method of store accounting, called the retail inventory method, based on the relation of the total cost to the total retail values during any accounting period, is gaining wide acceptance among merchants, according to those advocating it.

A brief explanation of the method, submitted by Frank Presbrey & Co., advertising agents, of New York, sets forth the points of superiority of this method over all other inventory systems. The illustrative pamphlet, compiled by Ernst & Ernst Co., in the interest of sound business practices, asserts that the method is now "recognized as the simplest, soundest and most satisfactory system of accounting for retail stores."

The chief function of the method, it is explained, is to make available, whenever desired, the statistics of operation of the store, an accurate inventory, to provide an effective check on the various "leaks," and to facilitate selling and expense controls as reflected in the store budgets. Therefore the method is said to be a progressive inventory method, and to mirror the general business of the store or department at all times, and to that extent obviate the necessity of annual physical inventories.

The method briefly is this:

In one series of calculations the beginning inventory for the month is set down as to cost and retail. To this is added the purchases during the month, both cost and retail, the cost including transportation charges. Additional mark-up is also included. This forms the basis for the percentage of the total retail values of total mark-up, and this mark-up deducted, naturally gives the cost inventory.

The mark-downs, for inventory purposes, are included in the deductions along with the sales. The mark-down cancellations are deducted from the mark-downs. With the deductions also, for inventory purposes, are included, employes' discounts and shrinkages.

Now, with these deductions made, the ending retail inventory is given. And to find the closing cost inventory, the percentage of original mark-up is deducted from the closing retail inventory.

The method, it has been claimed, is inaccurate, especially where wide variations in mark-up are involved. However, the method does not pretend to give the actual cost of a small group of articles in stock, it is explained. It is purely to develop a sound cost value of the inventory for the store or department as a whole. It has been approved by the Treasury Department as a basis for determining profit and loss for income tax purposes.

EAST SYRIA IS STILL IN REVOLT, FRENCH MILITARY ASSERT

Stern Measures Necessary to Prevent Anarchy and Ruin, They Declare.

CIVILIAN AUTHORITIES PROFESS CALM REIGNS

Official Communiques Reveal Sharp Fighting Is General, However.

The following dispatch was written by Thomas T. Topping, a staff correspondent of the Associated Press, who is in Syria. After the French bombardment of the Midan quarter of Damascus on May 7, the correspondent obtained a wireless interview with the high commissioner for Syria, under the French mandate, M. De Jouvenel, while the latter was aboard ship returning to France. Later, through a messenger, who crossed the French lines, Topping obtained a written statement from the commander of the Druses, Sultan Pasha attache. This was the first official statement of the Druse side of the struggle to reach the outside world. The correspondent here pictures the conditon of strife that still prevails in Syria.

Damascus, June 22 (By courier to Haifa).—All Syria east of the Lebanon mountains from Aleppo in the north to Soueida in the south still is in a state of open revolt.

Stern repressive measures by a large military force are necessary to save the country from anarchy and ruin, in the opinion of French military experts.

At least 50,000 soldiers and a six months' campaign are needed to restore order and peace in the French mandate, in the belief of these experts.

Civilian authorities still profess to believe that Syria can be pacified by diplomacy and continue to express with satisfaction that "calm reigns in Syria." They say this despite daily attacks by dissident tribesmen against the outposts surrounding Damascus and the shelling, bombing and rifle firing which make the ancient city more like a place in the zone of operations during the world war than one administered under a class A mandate.

Disturbance in Lebanon.

Even Lebanon, with its newly installed republic, is not free from disturbances. When French High Commissioner Henry de Jouvenel left for Paris he told the correspondent for the Associated Press that he was "returning to France because conditions are normal and peace reigns in Syria."

This view is frankly not shared by the military authorities here as even their official communiques show. During the week of June 14 to 21 not less than 2,000 shells and bombs were fired by French batteries upon the villates and gardens surrounding Damascus. Machine gun and rifle fire has been virtually incessant. The communiques reveal sharp fighting in various villages and on the Lebanon-Syrian frontier.

The official communiques, as published during the past week, read:

Communiques Show Situation.

June 15. "The village of Jube in the region of Nebek was occupied this morning after keen resistance from the enemy on the hills at Bahka. At 11 o'clock the village of Assal also was occupied."

June 16. "The French troops, protected by artillery effected entrance into the village of Tire and returned to Souida without incident. In the region of Salkhad, a column marched upon the village of Intam, which was occupied at 10 o'clock."

June 17. "This morning in the region of Rangas, a detachment attacked the village from the west while a second detachment charged the rebels occupying the hills to the east. The enemy positions were captured after a brilliant combat. The enemy left 40 dead upon the field of battle."

Bandits Burn Village.

A second communique of June 18: "The train from Aleppo to Beirut was halted north of Baalbeck by rebel bands who cut the railroad tracks, fired upon the armored train and burned the station and village of Laboue. Repression is being carried out."

The French hold the cities along the main lines of the Aleppo-Jerusalem railroad securely. Aleppo, Homs, Hama, Damascus, Seraa and even Soueida and Salkhad, recently captured from the Druses, are firmly in their possession without immediate prospect of the Dissidents dislodging them.

But the French are virtually prisoners in the cities with the disaffected tribesmen running wild throughout the country. In order to go from one city to another, slow-moving armored trains or tank-conveyed automobiles are necessary. Even the train from Beirut to Damascus, running most of the journey through relatively pacified Lebanon, carries a special armored coach, equipped with two machine guns behind the locomotive.

Stations and Tracks Guarded.

Stations and tracks are guarded by soldiers. To go from Rayak to Damascus reminds one of a trip from Nancy to Verdun during the operations of 1916, so thickly are the soldiers, mostly Circassian and Armenian mercenaries—around the stations.

Military men here believe that the present situation can not endure. They feel that sufficient effectives must be placed at their disposal to quell the uprisings throughout Syria or that France must withdraw.

The succinct remark of an artillery officer today sums up the situation thus: "Give us more troops or let's get out."

MORE ARE PLANNING TO ENTER IN POST'S WORLD SERIES RACE

Sandlot Teams Enthusiastic for Contest; Citizens to Be Represented.

HARRIS AND GRIFFITH LAUD SENDING OF 46

Benefit to Be Held Friday at Glen Echo for Class 3 Nines.

More and more individuals are signifying their intention of entering The Post 1926 World Series Contest. The different sandlot teams entered in the contest are beginning to get out and hustle among their many friends for subscriptions to The Post. The boys state that as school is out now they will have much more opportunity to obtain subscriptions.

If citizens of Washington could sit in the contest manager's office through one day they would be greatly surprised at enthusiasm of the managers of the different sandlot teams entered in the contest. The boys all state that their team will be the one that will go as our guest to the world series.

This office has received many letters in the last few weeks from citizens' associations expressing their intentions of having a representative from their community enter our contest. It is gratifying to the contest manager to know that the different civic associations are taking such an active interest in the contestants and the baseball teams entered from their part of the city.

Praised by Baseball Chiefs.

Stanley "Bucky" Harris and Clark Griffith were high in their praise of The Post in sending 46 people to the world series. They all state that the men of the Washington team are going to fight to the finish to give Washington another pennant.

Under the rules of the contest 46 people from Washington and vicinity will have an opportunity of attending the 1926 world series games, wherever played. The 46 will be composed of 14 individuals from the District of Columbia, four individuals from within a radius of 25 miles of the Capitol, and two from anywhere in the United States, also two sandlot teams, including nine regular players, three substitutes and a manager. One team will be under 16, and one more than 16. The teams must also be within a radius of 25 miles of the Capitol. As the guests of The Post they will have all expenses paid consisting of the best reserved seats, transportation, hotel bills, and meals. One of the big inducements to the sandlot teams is the fact that they will have the opportunity of having all baseball players playing in the world series personally autograph any baseballs.

Special Entertainment Friday.

The first of a series of special entertainments given by The Post for the benefit of class 3 sandlot teams entered in the contest, will be given at Glen Echo amusement park Friday through the courtesy of Leonard B. Schloss, general manager of Glen Echo.

The only requirement necessary for teams to go on this outing will be that they must personally register their names at room 49, Post building, as soon as possible before July 1. This office will be open from 9 in the morning until 5 in the evening, also from 7 to 9 p. m. for the benefit of those who find it inconvenient to call during the day.

The sandlot teams will be taken on this trip regardless of the number of votes entered to their credit in this contest. All teams must meet in front of The Post building on Friday promptly at 12:30 p. m., as we will leave immediately in motor buses supplied by The Post for Glen Echo amusement park.

The entire amusement park has been turned over to The Post by the management for that afternoon for the entertainment of its guests.

Business Body Head Says Bureau Succeeds

Although the fraudulent promoter, who learned a new game in Florida real estate, no longer finds Washington profitable, nearby Maryland and Virginia are the scenes of his present operations, Louis Rothschild, director of the Better Business bureau, said in his annual report yesterday. Florida, Director Rothschild said, has rid itself of the questionable promoter.

Success in all branches of the bureau was related in the report. The merchandise, shopping, complaint, and advertising sections were all highly commended by Director Rothschild for the work done between July 1, 1925, and the present time. Praise was also given to Howard M. Cool, who preceded Rothschild as director. Newspapers, too, came in for a share of praise.

MARTIN DENIES WIFE'S CHARGE OF DESERTION

Suit for Limited Divorce Is Answered With Counter Accusation.

Merton G. Martin, department store buyer, whose wife alleged that his affections had been alienated by Mrs. Frances Coit, wealthy widow of Oakland, Calif, filed an amended answer to his wife's limited divorce action yesterday in equity court.

Through Attorney Chapin Brown, Martin denies his wife's charge of desertion and says that she deserted him September 22, last. He attaches to his answer a copy of a letter alleged to have been written to him by Mrs. Martin which states, among other things, that "Our marriage was a mistake. We may go on for sometime longer and smooth out our differences superficially, but a final separation is inevitable. I am leaving you with no debts contracted for myself."

The alienation suit in which Mrs. Martin sought $100,000 damages from Mrs. Coit ended in a verdict for Mrs. Coit by direction of Justice Hoehling after Attorneys Lambert, Yeatman and Canfield had attacked validity of the marriage of Mrs. Martin in February, 1925, the attack being based on the fact that Martin had not at that time been finally divorced from his first wife.

Committee on Arrangements to Meet Wednesday in Franklin School.

CHAIRMEN TO CONFER TOMORROW AFTERNOON

Two Rehearsals Will Be Held This Week in Front of Building.

Not for many years has so much interest been shown here in a civic celebration as is being evidenced in the plans, preparation and personnel of "The Story of America" pageant of liberty to be given under the auspices of the Community center department and under the management of the committee on arrangements for the celebration of the 150th anniversary of American independence on Monday night, July 5, on the east front Capitol steps at 7:45 o'clock.

CAFRITZ'S SUCCESS LAID TO COMPLETE ORGANIZATION PLAN

MARKED ADVANTAGES GIVEN HOME SEEKERS

Cites Great Percentage of People Owning Their Residences in Washington.

Back of all successful accomplishment, no matter what the field, are the plans, policies and a strong and well-organized personnel working in cooperation with an enlightened and far-seeing management, which makes for that success. Such is the case with the Cafritz organization. In last Sunday's Post an article appeared on the Cafritz organization telling broadly of its beginning and development to a position of leadership in the real estate field, how with no influence or backing its president and founder, Morris Cafritz, laid the foundation and built through foresight and courage an organization which has added newer and finer buildings of all kinds to a more beautiful and prosperous Washington, and which has incidentally made the name of Cafritz a synonym for progressiveness, initiative and worth-while achievement.

The record of the Cafritz organization in the past four years since its beginning is one of unusual brilliance and has its inspiration for those who need look no farther than their own city for opportunities. In a recent talk with Mr. Cafritz the conversation drifted to the subject of success. The writer, anxious to find out all that he could, asked Mr. Cafritz about the opportunities for a young man today. Mr. Cafritz replied that the opportunities of today are much greater than ever before. On every side and in every walk of life one has a splendid opportunity to earn as well as learn. Business men of today are more progressive, more willing to make changes and improvements for the benefit of their business and are constantly alert to new ideas and always ready to take on the man who can accomplish their plans and in turn carry the business to further success.

In the early stages of its growth, the Cafritz organization realized its success depended on a definite plan and policy in its activities, and the strict adherence to this fundamental plan, with the improvements and changes brought about by changing conditions, has given it a goal on which time has set the seal of approval. One of the first things decided upon was to give the purchaser the benefit of the economies resulting from its operations. This affected the price of the house and went back still further to the cost of production. The larger the quantities of material the lower the price. This applied to land as well as construction materials.

Economies Passed On.

The result was that the Cafritz organization in the matter of realizing all possible economies, and passing these economies on to the purchaser, began at the beginning and that was the land. The economies in land are realized in the purchase of not a few lots in sections that are already fairly well developed, but in the purchase of large tracts of land in advance of the section's development. This method requires foresight and keen business judgment and the savings are great. Thus the ultimate purchaser of a home in a development or subdivision of this nature pays less for his ground. He saves through the builder's wisdom of buying in advance for future needs.

In the matter of construction materials, economies are effected in a similar manner. Large-scale operations require large quantities of materials: millions of feet of lumber, thousands of barrels of cement, millions of brick, and enormous amounts of all other raw and finished products. The builder who is in the business for such large orders can necessarily obtain them at a much better figure than if his requirements were smaller. He does not have to depend on a local market if prices are better elsewhere, and he can go to the sources of supply for some of his materials, if necessary. He can also put better grade materials in his houses than a smaller operator and sell them at a lower price. The economies and consequent saving to the purchaser in this instance need little explanation. Everyone knows that the moderate price of a certain popular automobile results from the application of the method discussed above.

Offer Model Homes.

In the upbuilding of the fundamental plan of the Cafritz organization, another requirement was incorporated in the general scheme. This was the determination to give the purchaser the best house architecturally at the price. With this determination the Cafritz organization employed its own technical staff of architects, draftsmen, and engineers and set them to work to perfect the plans for its operations and the well-known result is the Cafritz lifetime homes, which embody the latest improvements in equipment, pleasing and attractive elevations and floor plans which are ideal in the arrangement of the rooms and the studied utilization of space, so that all of the requirements of housekeeping and modern social life are complied with.

There is an added charm in the mellow tones of the tapestry brick, a certain freshness in the neat colonial front porch, an unusual depth to the rear yards. The rooms are unusually spacious and the kitchen and bath are models of cleanliness and convenience.

With the economics obtained in the purchase of land and materials in large quantities and excellence of design and plan, the Cafritz organization added a third requirement of fundamental importance—skilled workmanship, under proper supervision. A standard of excellence was set for the various kinds of work entering into the construction of each part of the building, and this standard has been constantly maintained. Only the best class of skilled workmen are employed, men of experience capable of meeting the rigid standards of the company, and these men are carefully supervised by picked foremen of expert knowledge.

The use of skilled men, well-paid, insures a high grade of performance and enables the builder to produce a better house at a lower cost. In order to realize the greatest efficiency of skilled workmen, their efforts must be combined with the use of labor-saving machinery and equipment. This was but a natural step, and today the Cafritz organization owns its steam shovels, fleets of trucks, concrete mixers, hoists, power saws and a large amount of auxiliary equipment costing thousands of dollars.

It is practically able and equipped to handle all phases of construction work with its own men and equipment, according to plans drawn by its own technical staff. Doing its own surveying and laying out, carries on its excavation with its own steam shovel and fleet of trucks; does its own concrete and form work, carpenter work, masonry construction, papering, painting and decorating.

One of the outstanding economies of such a pretentious program of production is the saving of time, no unnecessary delays that run up interest charges, a well-equipped and well-organized force controlled and supervised by competent and progressive management, using the best of materials and building according to plans perfected by the Cafritz organization, plans that have sold thousands of homes and numerous apartment buildings and commercial structures in Washington.

Development Criticised.

The men who laughed at Morris Cafritz and prophesied failure when he purchased the old Columbia golf course and began the extensive development of Petworth, did not know the broad fundamental plan on which he was building and could not see what his vision pictured in a delightful community of charming homes on a high elevation close to the heart of the city, and yet far enough away so that they might enjoy comforts and conveniences which only this section of the city can offer.

With the thought of building the best house at the price and passing the economies of large-scale operations on to the ultimate purchaser, was combined that of selling such a house on terms that would meet the convenience of the prospective owner. This was not all. A sales organization was organized composed of a number of men capable of properly representing the Cafritz organization and selling the public on the merit built in Cafritz homes. Such a force had to be supported by an advertising campaign designed to obtain the desired results. This was just one more step in rounding the organization to a greater stage of completeness and assuring greater cooperation among departments and, above all, greater service to the home-buying public of Washington. All of this was not the work of a day, but it was accomplished in a remarkably brief period of time.

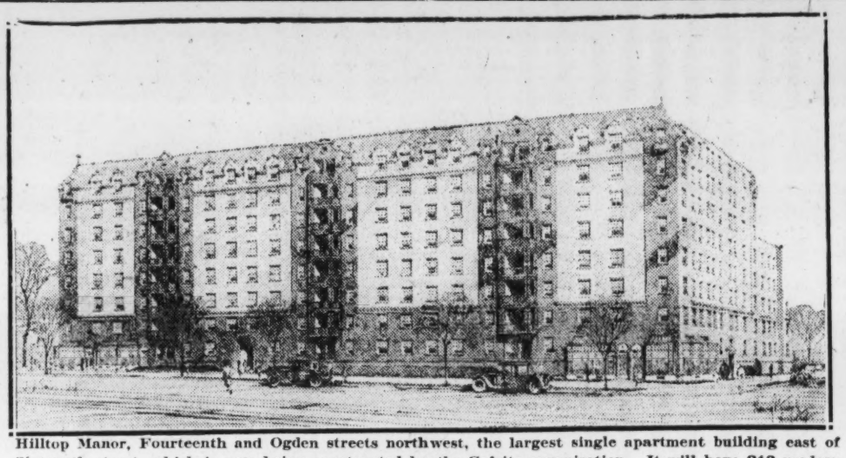

Easy For Purchaser.

Today the purchaser of a Cafritz home may get possession on a small cash payment, less than that required on many an automobile, and convenient monthly payments which include interest on both trusts and payments of principal on the second trust. With each payment the equity in a home increases. Interest amounts to about one-third of the total monthly payment, and the balance which increases his equity practically amounts to money saved. This plan of selling homes has had a very great importance in the recent residential development of Washington; one of the most prominent aspects is from the standpoint of society in general. The virtues of home ownership have been brought to public attention from many sources so that a repetition of them seems almost unnecessary.

However, a few of them may be mentioned. Home ownership represents a means of practical saving. The family that rents spends money each month that could just as well be applied on the purchase of a home with a considerable saving, thus providing a place for loved ones, a home of their own. Home ownership also makes for a better type of citizen and brings into play the instinct of possession. It gives an individual a greater pride in his city and in the community in which he lives, affords his children greater

BOMBS WILL BE SET OFF

Patriotic exercises, a parade, athletic events, fireworks, and a musical program will be among the features of an Independence day celebration in Michigan park July 5 under the auspices of the Michigan Park Citizens association. Residents of the park and upper Brookland are cooperating with the organization to make the affair a success.

Observances commemorating the anniversary of America's independence will begin at 10 o'clock with a parade of children under the direction of Mrs. John A. Kiernan. This parade, headed by a band of music, will start from Twelfth and Upshur streets northeast, proceeding to the athletic field west of Michigan avenue and Perry streets northeast. There patriotic exercises are to be held.

President Robert R. Faulkner, of the Michigan Park Citizens association, will deliver an address, and a pledge of allegiance to the flag will be taken by the assemblage, led by Selden Ely, supervising principal of the fifth division of the public schools. In commemoration of the thirteen original States a salute of thirteen bombs will be fired. One verse of "America" will be sung by the gathering. Mrs. John A. Kiernan will sing "The Star-Spangled Banner," accompanied by the band, and B. B. Pettus will read the Declaration of Independence.

Lunch is to be served on the field after which a series of 22 athletic events will take place. Potato races sack races, shoe races, three-legged races, and 35-yard, 50-yard and 75-yard dashes will be among the various events, as well as a tug of war, under the direction of Franklin T. Howe, for the enjoyment of boys and girls. Gold, silver and bronze medals will be awarded winners. Prizes also are to be conferred upon participants in the children's parade, either for originality or beauty of costume and decoration of doll carriages or speed wagon. The Boys Independent Community Band of Washington will play.

NEWS OF THE BOY SCOUTS

Camp Roosevelt opens tomorrow with a capacity registration for the first two weeks and available places rapidly filling for the third and fourth weeks. Prospects are bright for a crowded camp during the entire period in July and August, when it will be in progress.

For two weeks the pioneer staff, in charge of Assistant Executive Harrison A. Matsinger, has been busy setting things in order for the coming of the scouts. Camp Carpenter Charles Dorsey has been on the ground since May 1 working on the addition to the dining hall and the kitchen. Changes made in this building constitute as great an improvement to the camp as the erection of the new recreation building two years ago. The dining hall now has open sides, tightly screened; a clear view of the bay and the whole sweep of the water front and accommodations for many more scouts than the present capacity of the camp. A new kitchen with new equipment providing for liquid fuel in place of the old coal and wood burning range and on a separate floor from the dining room removes all the undesirable features of the old arrangement.

Capt. Hazard has been busy on a new pier, some 400 feet long and wider than in previous years, providing for better approach to the shore from the camp launch. A new sailboat, in addition to the two cutters loaned by the Annapolis Naval Academy, has been added to the water fleet and an extra canoe for those who qualify. Swimming Instructor "Spike" Bailey and Boatman Harry Crist are both ready for the scouts.

The following scouts and scout leaders are registered for the opening week: Troop 1, Richard Chambers; Troop 2, Irvin Brown, Enlow Harry Carter, Charles Hunt, Marlow Perry and Robert Weintraub; Troop 8, Edward Barnhart, Nelson Barnhart, Wallace Bloyer, Morgan d'Espard, William d'Espard, Douglas C. McDougal, Edward Memler, Willard Memler; Troop 12, Robert W. New Chapter of C. M. O.

A new chapter of the Camp Roosevelt honor tribe was constituted by an initiating team from the District of Columbia parent organization last week, and another scout camp will now experience the thrills connected with this exceedingly helpful tribe. By authorization of council of sachems, six members journeyed to Camp Roosevelt, the scoutcraft camp of the Gloucester and Salem counties, New Jersey, scout council, and initiated ten scouts and scoutmasters into the order. James D. Hall, formerly assistant scout executive of Washington, is scout executive now of this council, and will conduct the camp. The following members of the C. M. O. constituted the initiating team: John S. Cole, C. G. Schlaefli, Carl Hartung, F. G. Steuart, Wilson Leverton, the president of the C. M. O., and the scout executive, Linn C. Drake. The visiting teams were royally entertained at the camp.

A third chapter of the C. M. O. will soon be organized in connection with the camp of the Waltham, Mass., council, of which H. B. Holbrook, also formerly an assistant executive of the Washington council, is now executive. This organization of new tribes is pleasing to the many members of the Washington C. M. O., who have benefited for the last six years from that camp honor society.

New Assistant Executive.

At the June meeting of the executive board of the District of Columbia council, J. W. Talley was elected assistant executive, and will take office July 1. One of his first duties will be to accompany the team from Troop 100, of which he was at one time scoutmaster, on its excursion trip to Philadelphia, where the team will represent Washington in the annual intercity Boy Scout field day, that has for the last three years been held in Washington. Mr. Talley comes to the work of scouting with a background of many years' experience in the movement, both as scoutmaster and as field executive.

Camp Wilson Open.

William Thompson is now on duty as director at the Woodrow Wilson reservation. A cook will soon be available, and the camp will be conducted on much the same plan as last year. This spot has been highly commended as a camp site by recent scout visitors to Washington.

Philadelphia Field Meet.

Troop 100 won the right by winning both the divisional and the interdivisional field meets, to represent Washington at Philadelphia on July 2 and 3, when teams from many cities will compete in the annual field meet this year, to be held in connection with the sesquicentennial exposition. Nine scouts, together with Scoutmaster Dan Tyrrell and Assistant Scoutmaster William Stephenson, will make the trip, and hope to bring back a good report.

Troop 20 Takes a Trip.

A truck load of scouts from Troop 20, of the Epworth M. E. church, victors in the standard troop contest for 1925-26, started last Thursday, under the leadership of Scoutmaster Worth E. Shoults, for a camping trip through Canada. They will be gone nearly a month, and plan to visit numerous scout camps on the excurison. They are traveling in their own truck, purchased recently for troop use by friends. Their Washington friends are eagerly awaiting reports of their various experiences.

Troop 44, Edward Perkins, scoutmaster, held open house for parents and friends at their meeting place in the Washington Heights Presbyterian church Friday evening.

Troop 32, James O. Rolls scoutmaster, has just transferred its meeting place from the chapel of the Church of the Transfiguration to the new Hamline M. E. church, at Sixteenth and Buchanan streets northwest. Hugh Work, formerly a member of the old Hamline troop, No. 60, and recently connected with Troop 11, will be made a junior assistant scoutmaster of the troop.

opportunities for normal development and expression and contributes to his standing in the community, for the question "Do you own real estate?" is asked nearly every one applying for a position of any responsibility.

By putting home ownership within the reach of practically every one on terms that are reasonable and sound, Washington enjoys the enviable distinction of being a city where the majority of the population are home owners rather than renters, and the Cafritz organization has contributed largely in bringing about this condition. But building the best home for the money and financing the purchase on terms that made home ownership a pleasure rather than a financial burden were only two steps of the three. The last and none the less important was the popularizing of the product, Cafritz homes, and the broad campaign of advertising and publicity and a broad policy of service won the public's good will and approval for the product, for the best that was in the Cafritz organization was put into the homes and the result was communities of happy home owners.

DRAWING OF PLANS ARE BEGUN FOR NINE SCHOOL BUILDINGS

ELEMENTARY PROJECTS TO BE FINISHED IN 1927

Architect Harris Also Has Begun on Drawings for Business High.

Municipal Architect Albert L. Harris has begun drawing plans for nine school building projects. The appropriations for these projects become available Thursday.

The building program is as follows: Completion of the John Burroughs school and the Langley Junior High school, construction of a new junior high school for Georgetown in the vicinity of Thirty-fifth street and Wisconsin avenue, the erection of a new sixteen-room elementary school for Woodridge at Carlton and Central avenues, construction of additions to the Smothers school and the Hine Junior High school, and the construction of auditoriums at the West and Petworth schools.

It is expected that the plans for the elementary school projects will be completed in time to award contracts some time in the fall. The construction work is scheduled to be finished by the beginning of the school term in September, 1927. The other buildings are not scheduled to be completed until February, 1928.

Addition to Hine Junior.

Nine classrooms and a gymnasium will be contained in the addition to the Hine Junior High school, while the addition to the Smothers school will contain four rooms.

When the Langley Junior High school is completed it will have, in addition to new classrooms, an auditorium, a cafeteria and two gymnasiums, one for boys and one for girls. The Burroughs school will be enlarged by eight rooms.

In addition to starting work on the plans for these projects, Municipal Architect Harris has begun work on the drawings for the proposed new Business High school, which will be located near the Macfarland Junior High school. Thus far, Congress has only appropriated $5,000 for this project. This sum is simply designed to cover the cost of preparing the plans.

Bill Would Cut Duty On Cotton Products

He termed the proposed legislation "a significant evidence of the sincerity of leading Democrats, who have asserted that tariff reduction is essential to secure prosperity for farmers."

MEDICAL FIELD SCHOOL IMPROVES EQUIPMENT

Better First-Aid Packet and Dressing for Wounds Is Arranged.

NEW KIT REPLACES BELT

As a result of researches and experiments largely initiated by the equipment laboratory at the medical field service school, Carlisle Barracks, Pa., under direction of Maj. John P. Fletcher, medical corps, encouraging progress is being made in the standardization and improvement of medical department field equipment. Many of the projects already have been approved officially and laid down for future procurement when the stock of old pattern equipment in hand is exhausted. In its work, the laboratory approached the problems from a combat standpoint by considering the medical department activities as they are encountered from front to rear in time of war.

Among the noteworthy attainments of the equipment laboratory is the production of an improved first aid packet to be carried on the person of every individual in the field, and a large dressing for shell and other large wounds, to be made immediately available at the front.

There also has been devised an entirely new individual kit for the personnel of the medical department, which will replace the belt now prescribed. For medical personnel on duty with combat troops there has been made up a new field medical set in an ingenious type of container, which will replace the old dispensary equipment.

GUNNERY WINNERS BEING DETERMINED

Announcement Expected After Thursday; Concord Is Holding Lead.

Now that practically all classes of ships of the navy have completed the gunnery program for the competitive year that ends Wednesday, final reports of the various practices are being computed in the office of the diretcor of fleet training. The winners of some practices already have been announced, but the results of others and determination of the winners in the respective classes of the gunnery trophies yet are to be ascertained. It is expected that it will be possible to announce the winners in most classes soon after Thursday.

In the cases of the battle efficiency trophies, which are awarded on the basis of combined gunnery and engineering performances, the winners, of course, can not be determined until after all engineering reports for the month of June are received and computed.

Following is the relative standing of light cruisers in engineering performances for the competitive year to May 31: Concord, Richmond, Milwaukee, Trenton, Omaha, Raleigh, Marblehead, Memphis, Cincinnati and Detroit.

TAKOMA PARK BANK TO HAVE NEW HOME

Construction of Building Is Authorized by Board of Directors.

Construction of a building to house the Takoma Park Bank has been authorized by the board of directors. Exterior of the building will be of Indiana limestone and buff brick, while the interior will include bronze and marble. The whole will be of fireproof construction.

The floor and ceiling of the vault will be of reinforced concrete 27 inches thick. The steel reinforcing will be similar to that employed in the new Federal Reserve bank buildings. A wiring system will be used which will make it impossible for anybody to tamper with the vault without sounding a burglar alarm.

Tellers and clerks will be guarded against holdups by an ingenious wiring system, designed for that purpose. The contract for designing and constructing the new building has been awarded to the Tilghman Meyer Co., of Allentown, Pa. Building operations will begin within a few weeks.

Good Will and Pleasant Are to Open for the Season on Wednesday.

80 PLACES ALLOTTED FOR GUESTS AT EACH

Additional Tents Named and More Are Expected From Local Residents.

Camp Good Will and Camp Pleasant will open officially Wednesday morning when two gatherings of children and mothers are to assemble in this city to be transported up the Potomac river, for a two-weeks vacation.

Curtis school, 3229 O street northwest, has been selected as the rendezvous for mothers and children from the Georgetown district of the Associated Charities. They have been asked to meet there at 9 o'clock Wednesday morning, prepared to proceed to Camp Good Will under direction of Mrs. Dorothy W. M. Bean. Eighty places have been allotted to this first party for the trip.

Volunteers Furnish Cars.

At the same time another group of children and mothers will assemble at the Thomson school, Twelfth and L streets northwest, under personal guidance of Miss Rebeka F. Morse, visitor for the Central District of the Associated Charities, to whom the same number of allotments have been made. Both of the camp parties are to be transported to camp in private automobiles furnished by volunteers, many of whom will drive their own cars.

Dr. Joseph A. Murphy, chief medical inspector of public schools, assisted by a corps of school doctors and nurses, will give the children a physical examination to see that they are free from any sort of contagious disease, at the same time noting any physical defects for correction either during the stay at camp or after the return home. The campers are to arrive at their destination in time for the midday meal.

Additional tents for Camp Good Will have been named, it was announced. Four tents are to be called "Cleveland Park," as the result of a lawn fete in the Cleveland Park home of Miss Agnes Miller, which netted $140. This amount was sent in by Mrs. Philip S. Smith.

The Business Women's council also is naming a tent for that group. St. Margaret's Sunday school, through Commander C. T. Jewell, has sent $35 and will have a tent named for the institution. Numerous other tents will commemorate gifts from individuals and Washington firms and civic organizations.

The huge bone, almost completely fossilized, was exhumed by Dr. Cummings, who is also professor of archeology at the University of Arizona; Capt. D. W. Page, archeologist of Washington, D. C., and Charles Udall, owner of the mining tract.

Dr. Cummings said the fossil bed disclosed is at least ten acres in extent.

"What is the idea, any way?" the judge asked. "Guess it must have been the moonlight that made me forget myself," Jarbee replied. "Ten dollars," the judge said.

Judge Schuldt had an unusually busy night, although all of his cases were small. Assistant District Attorney William L. Taggart, of New York, was an interested onlooker through most of the evening. He was the guest of Judge Schuldt on the bench.

COLORED ASSOCIATIONS IN FAVOR OF CLAYTON

Civic Federation Indorses Selection for New Public Utilities Commission.

APPROVE APPLICATIONS

Special action of the Federation of Citizens Associations indorsing William McK. Clayton as representative and advocate of the people on the new public utilities commission, was approved by the colored Federation of Civic Associations at a meeting in the board room at the District building Friday night. Francis Wells, of the Central Northwest association, presented the name of Mr. Clayton to the federation.

He was advocated as the "best equipped man for the position," by Dr. George H. Richardson, George Beason, Huver I. Brown, George W. Jackson, E. J. Morten and Capt. H. D. Queen, who moved the approval of the indorsement given Mr. Clayton by the Federation of Citizens Associations. A questionnaire from the board of education on lengthening of school hours was negatively answered with reference to all inquiries.

Applications of the Capitol View and Reno associations for membership in the federation were received and favorably acted on. A communication from A. L. Mundy, president of the Capitol View association, representing the suburban northeast, named A. H. Huff, Charles A. Miller, Percy Adams, C. A. Allen and Isaiah Rountree as delegates to the federation. The Reno association returned to membership after two years of inactivity.

George W. Jackson was appointed chairman of the committee on constitution and by-laws. The federation was thanked by W. H. Lewis, president of the Garfield association, for assistance in securing a 12-inch water main over a portion of the territory leading to his subdivision.

SENATOR PERMITTED TO REVEAL HIS VOTE

Senate Allows Smith to Tell Constituency if He Supported Woodlock.

(By the Associated Press.)

The wall of secrecy surrounding executive sessions of the Senate was cracked yesterday when unanimous consent was granted to Senator Smith (Democrat), South Carolina, to tell his constituents how he voted on the nomination of Thomas F. Woodlock to be a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Consent was granted at the request of Senator Blease (Democrat), South Carolina, who declared his colleague, up for reelection, was unable to disclose how he voted on the nomination on pain of expulsion from the Senate under the rules. The Woodlock nomination, he explained, is a factor in the primary campaign, in which Senator Smith has opposition.

At first Senator Blease offered a resolution to permit any senator to disclose how he voted on confirmation of a presidential nomination, but was blocked by a motion to refer it to the rules committee. He then threatened to notify South Carolina newspapers himself how Senator Smith voted and take the consequences, but later asked unanimous consent to permit Senator Smith to announce his vote and obtained it.

FOREIGN BANK NOTES UNDER BAN IN MEXICO

President Calles Issues Order Forbidding Circulation; Partial Exception Granted U.S.

(By the Associated Press.)

President Calles has issued an executive order forbidding importation and circulation in the interior of Mexico of foreign bank notes and of foreign currency in general, except gold.

Notice of the order, which was signed June 16, was received yesterday at the State Department in cables forwarded by Ambassador Sheffield at Mexico City. Mr. Sheffield gave no explanation, but other reports have indicated that recent issues of Mexican bank notes had not been popularly received, American and other foreign notes being preferred by the public.

The order permitted circulation of American bank notes by persons within 100 kilometers of the border, but no individual can import or circulate even in that area more than $500 in such currency.

FRENCH FOMENTING TROUBLE FOR ITALY, ROME PAPERS HOLD

Unfriendliness Being Created in Abyssinia, Is Charge of Editors.

BITTERNESS REVEALED IN PUBLISHED COMMENT

"France Is Against Our Rights Everywhere," the Giornale D'Italia States.

Rome, June 26 (By A. P.).—Several Italian newspapers today make the accusation that the French press has been fomenting unfriendliness in Abyssinan toward Italy.

The papers comment bitterly on the recent criticism in Paris of the British and Italian negotiations concerning a definition of their spheres of economic interests in Abyssinia.

"Where now is cordial Franco-Italian cooperation possible?" asks Impero, while the Giornale d'Italia expresses the hope that the French government will not encourage the "unwise, irritating attempts of newspapers anxious to create suspicion and confusion where really everything is clear and pacific."

The negotiations, says Giornale d'Italia, are within the limits of the agreement of 1906, and are not intended to violate the political and economic rights or the sovereignty and independence of Abyssinia. The basis of the conversations is described as a definition of Great Britain's hydraulic rights on Lake Tzana and tIaly's right to construct a railway through Abyssinia linking up Erythrea and Italian Somaliland.

British Claims Reduced.

Asserting that Italy has induced Great Britain to reduce its claims in Abyssinia the newspaper declares, that this shows that the "Italian government intends to defend the interests of the Abyssinian population even against England."

"It is impossible to explain the noisy attitude of the Parisian newspapers except as an unfriendly desire to create in Abyssinia, by artifices and deformation of the palpable truth, a state of political mistrust against Italy, perhaps to create difficulties for the Italian railway project in order to maintain intact France's commercial railway monopoly in Abyssinia," the paper concludes.

"The action which the Quai D'Orsay is tenaciously carrying out warns us that France is against our rights, not only in the Mediterranean but everywhere," says the Corriere D'Italia. "France holds the diplomatic organization of Abyssinia firmly in its net of interests and intrigue. It is easy to make it believe the vilest insinuations concerning the 'unconfessed' intentions of the fascist government in order to excite hostility among the Abyssinians against any change in the actual conditions which are pleasant and beneficial to French interests. If France carries the question before the League of Nations, it is not improbabe that she will be preceded there by the governments of London and Rome."

SCHOONER PROVES PEER OF BUGEYE COMPETITOR

Special to The Washington Post.

Solomons Island, Md., June 26. Elusive breezes and masterly sailing marked the sixth annual regatta of the Chesapeake Bay Championship Workboat Races association, held here this afternoon.

Seven stirring races were run, the schooner, bugeye, decked skipjack, open skipjack, motor workboat, Smith island crabbing craft and Hoovers island lilliputian classes, respectively.

The winner in the schooner race, the most picturesque of the day, was the Maud Thomas, sailed by Capt. A. H. Jones, of Chance. The Agnes Leonard, sailed by her owner, Capt. Calvert S. Leonard, of Cambridge, came in ahead in the bugeye race.

Wins in Decked Skipjack Class.

In the decked skipjack class, the Bernice J, of Tylertown, was the victor. In the open skipjack class, the Richard Lee, of Wenona, came in first. Her skipper was Capt. W. H. Smith. The motor workboat race was won by the Carrie IV, Capt. Pell Scott, of Toddsville.

Capt. Ernest Evans, of Ewell, brought his Smith island crabbing boat home a winner in the race for this class. Fishing Creek won first honors in the race for lilliputians, when Capt. Clarence Creighton steered his craft, the Louise, across the finish line ahead of the other entries.

The regatta was sailed before thousands of spectators who lined the shore at Solomons. At Millstone, on the Patuxent, across from Solomons, another crowd of nearly 1,000 spectators was gathered. Hundreds of pleasure yachts from Washington and Baltimore were gathered along the course.

When the races started at 10 a. m. a light breeze was blowing. Before half an hour had passed, however, it died and a dead calm prevailed several hours. As the boats were half way over the last lap a slight breeze sprang up which freshened steadily as the afternoon progressed.

It took the winning schooner 4 hours and 47 minutes to cover the 13-mile course. The Agnes Leonard, winner in the bugeye class, completed the course in 5 hours and 30 seconds.

Tiny Boats in Hot Contest.

The race in the Hoopers Island Lilliputian class was one of the most interesting of the regatta. The tiny boats, ten of which were entered, got away to an almost perfect start and the race was contested hotly from beginning to end.

The schooner race definitely settled several arguments of the Bay. The relative sailing ability of schooners and bugeyes long had been a subject for debate. In the light wind that prevailed today the schooners showed what they were good for. Their tall masts and great topsails enabled them to make the best of the gentle breeze. In addition, their deep hulls made it possible for them to take full advantage of the tide.

Clears Up Skeleton "Murder Mystery"

Baltimore, June 26 (By A. P.). A skeleton that Dr. Frank Kellar, former practicing physician and now veterinarian for Guy Bedwell, Maryland turfman, purchased for $10 twenty years ago, was the center of a "murder mystery" for a brief period today.

Dr. Kellar, a former tenant of an Overlea farm, stored the skeleton in the barn. Children found it when Abraham Gudelsky, present owner, did some spring barn cleaning. It was taken to the morgue and a police investigation was under way when Dr. Kellar claimed it.

Mine Yields Skeleton Of Man Believed Slain

Clarksburg, W. Va., June 26.—A coroner's jury at Webster Springs is now investigating the discovery of a skeleton, believed to be that of George Holligan Bennett, who mysteriously disappeared from Webster Springs three years ago. The skeleton was found in an abandoned coal mine.

It is believed the man was first slain, since a hole was found in the skull, apparently caused by a bullet. Bennett disappeared when he left home to visit a sister, Mrs. William Studivan, at Ormdorff. A gold ring bearing his initials was found on a finger of the skeleton.

Dead Girl's Father Forgives Her Slayer

Baltimore, June 26 (By A. P.).—Hazleton Trueman Price, admitted slayer of his wife, today was forgiven by his father-in-law, Alonzo H. Abbott, here to take his daughter's body home to Cambridge, Md.

"I forgive you," said Abbott's message sent to the hospital cot where Price is near death from self-administered poison. "I wish you the best of luck and hope you recover."

Price strangled his wife, Pauline, Tuesday, when he failed to effect a reconciliation with her.

ANTISALOON LEAGUE AUDIT TO BE MADE

vestigation as the Antisaloon league.

The Reed committee held only a brief session yesterday. When Senators Reed, Goff, King and La Follette resumed the public session, after the executive session, Mr. Wheeler was on the stand. Senator Reed at once asked if Mr. Wheeler agreed to the plan whereby the committee would send its accountant to examine the league's books. Mr. Reed also said he would want to examine the books of "The American Issue," the official Antisaloon league publication, and would want information from the political branches of the league.

Mr. Reed's statement apparently took Mr. Wheeler by surprise. The dry chief had previously expressed a readiness to obtain any data which the committee might wish from the league's Westerville headquarters. But he hesitated when asked to give his assent to the committee's plan to send its own accountant.

Senator Reed said the committee was not a private detective agency and would not divulge the league's private affairs to the public. But he made it clear that the committee, in the executive session just held, had decided to send its accountant to Westerville and that settled the matter. Information which the committee desires from State branches of the Antisaloon league will be supplied by these branches, Mr. Reed suggested, and Mr. Wheeler assented to the suggestion.

Ready for Other Methods.

"Of course it is understood," said Senator King, "that if the States do not furnish the information, other methods will have to be taken. Senator Reed wants the list of the league's disbursements and the names of all contributors who have given more than $500 to the Antisaloon league or to any of its branches."

Mr. Wheeler expressed his dissent at having these names published, explaining that many of the donators did not like their names to appear. This, it is realized, is often the case, as contributors are then likely to be subjected to a deluge of appeals for contributions to other causes. At first it appeared that the committee was inclined to grant Mr. Wheler's request to withhold these names from the public. But Senator La Follette said:

"I feel that if those contributions are made to an organization they ought to be made public. I shall insist that they be made public."

Senator Reed indorsed the suggestion of Senator La Follette. "These people may have to bring their bank books here before we get through," he added.

There will be a session of the committee at 10 o'clock tomorrow, but the examination of Mr. Wheeler will not be resumed, Senator Reed stated, until the committee's accountant has completed his investigation and reported.

J. G. Armstrong Named Republican Chairman

Pittsburgh, June 26 (By A. P.).—Joseph G. Armstrong, Allegheny county commissioner, who last Tuesday told the Senate campaign fund investigating committee he supported Senator Pepper in the May primary as the "choice of two evils," was today, by acclamation, named chairman of the county Republican committee.

The organization meeting was marked by harmony, although previous to the gathering there had been some speculation as to the attitude toward the commissioner because of his testimony.

In explaining to the committee how he had come to support Senator Pepper, after he had said he supported Senator Robert M. La Follette in the last presidential campaign, Armstrong was quoted as having said: "Two rich men were running against each other. Senator Pepper and his family are rich and Representative Vare and his family are rich. I took the choice of two evils."

Maryland Is Unconcerned Over Order, Says Stayton

Baltimore, Md., June 26 (By A. P.).—"The plan of Lincoln C. Andrews to put under-cover investigators into the States to see that local officers enforce the prohibition laws does not concern Maryland, Capt. W. H. Stayton, founder of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, asserted today.

"It does not concern us for the reason that Maryland is one of the four States of the Union which has no prohibition enforcement act. Maryland never has had an enforcement act. It is the only State of which that can be said.

"I don't propose to get excited about the new Federal agents who come to Baltimore before they come," said Police Commissioner Charles D. Gaither. "Two attorneys general of Maryland have said that it is not the duty of the Baltimore police department to take over the duty of enforcing the Volstead act."

SAYS HE SAW HUNTED WOMAN IN TUSCON

Semple, now dead, and Rolf, the son of her second husband, Harold McPherson, from whom she is divorced, walked from her car and into the station lobby surrounded by eight bodyguards.

Violence Threatened.

Additional developments in the investigation of the alleged kidnaping may be expected, it was indicated today at the district attorney's office and at police headquarters.

Joseph Taylor, police captain in charge of the local investigation, said he understood Chief of Detectives Herman Cline had gathered some important data in his interviews with the evangelist and officers at Douglas, Ariz. District Attorney Keyes has instructed Joe Ryan, deputy, assigned to the case at Douglas, to withhold all statements on his investigation until he has reported here.

Seen on Street, Man Says.

Aboard Train With Aimee Semple McPherson, Near Gila, Ariz., June 26 (By A. P.).—B. H. Greenwood, city building inspector of Tucson, boarded this train on which Aimee Semple McPherson is homeward bound while it stopped at Tucson for few minutes this morning and in the presence of Detective Chief Herman Cline, and Deputy District Attorney Joe Ryan of Los Angeles, told the Los Angeles evangelist that she was the woman whom he had seen on the streets of Tucson four weeks ago.

Mrs. McPherson, who had retired, was aroused when Greenwood asked to see her. Surprised at the early morning call, she asked to know whether any friends had gotten aboard.

Falters in Reply.

Confronted by Greenwood, she asked whether he had ever seen her before and where.

"Yes," was Greenwood's emphatic reply.

Mrs. McPherson appeared to be taken aback at his reply and her next words faltered. After regaining her composure, the evangelist asked Greenwood on what he based his identification.

The Tucson building inspector replied that he recognized her mainly by her hair. He said he based his identification on the color of her hair, the thinness of her face and her figure.

Deserted Cabin Found.

Douglas, Ariz., June 26 (By A. P.).—A deserted cabin located eighteen miles southeast of Agua Prieta, across the Mexican border, was identified today by Constable O. A. Ash, of Douglas, as the one in which Mrs. Aimee Semple McPherson, Los Angeles evangelist, reported she was held captive by kidnapers before her escape last Tuesday.

Photographs of the cabin will be sent to Mrs. McPherson at Los Angeles. She offered a reward of $500 for locating it.

"The windows of the shack were barred," Constable Ash said. "There is every evidence that it was the place in which Mrs. McPherson was imprisoned. We traced her footprints to within a quarter of a mile of the place, where we lost them because cattle milling around had obliterated them.

"One of the windows showed evidence of having been broken. There are four rooms in the structure. The larger part of the construction is adobe brick. The cans of which Mrs. McPherson spoke were found inside, and that on which she said she cut the ropes with which she was bound is believed to have been a 40-gallon drum.

Sawed Bonds Not Found.

"Strands of rawhide and heavy ducking were found in one room and about the outside door. The bonds which the evangelist said she sawed from her arms and legs were not found, however."

The cabin is located at the end of a stretch of desert over which tracking was difficult, yet his party was able to trace a line of woman's footprints from within a quarter of a mile of the hut to Agua Prieta, Ash said.

Throughout the time the posse has been attempting to find the shack, according to the constable, it has encountered the tracks of a shod horse, parallel to the woman's footprints. During the search the party came upon a fence, through which the woman's tracks passed and through which the horseman had cut a gap.

Ash expressed the belief that the woman who made the tracks was followed later by a rider.

Approval of Updike Bill Changes Navy Retirement

New Measure Modifies Provisions of 1916 Act So That Officers Will Stay in Active Service for Longer Time.

The so-called Updike bill having been signed by the President, it will change materially the situation as to retention of certain officers on, and retirement of others from, the active list of the line of the navy.

The new law provides that, until March 5, 1929, the provisions of an act of August 29, 1916, for the retirement of captains, commanders and lieutenant commanders that are more than 56, 50 and 45 years of age, respectively, are modified to the extent that captains, commanders and lieutenant commanders shall not become ineligible for promotion and shall not be retired until they have completed 35, 28 and 21 years, respectively, of commissioned service in the navy; and, upon completion of such service, if not recommended for promotion, they shall be retired without regard to age.

The actual effect of the law is to give additional and effective opportunity of promotion to certain navy officers that otherwise would not enjoy that opportunity; and, on the other hand, it will result in retirement of others.

It results in retention on the active list of the following, who otherwise would be retired prior to June 1, 1927, under the age-in-grade provision of the act of 1916: Captains Edward S. Kellogg, John F. Hines, John T. Tompkins and George E. Gelm; Commanders John T. Bowers, Charles S. Joyce and James H. Comfort, and Lieut. Comdrs. Harry J. Reuse, Henry G. Fuller and August Schulze.

The following will be retired June 30, 1926, upon completion of 35, 28 and 21 years' commissioned service, respectively: Capts. DeWitt Blamer, John K. Robison, Edwin T. Pollock, Reginald R. Belknap and William D. Brotherton; Commanders Duncan M. Wood and Victor S. Houston, and Lieut. Comdrs. George P. Brown, Stanton L. H. Hazard, William L. Culbertson, Joe R. Morrison and Frank N. Eklund.

3 GROUPS OF NAVAL OFFICERS ELIGIBLE FOR NEXT ADVANCE

Promotions to Include Medical, Civil Engineer and Supply Corps.

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION LIST NOT COMPLETED

It had been supposed that certain staff officers of the navy, whose line running mates have been recommended for promotion, at once became eligible for consideration for promotion. It is understood now, however, that such staff officers will not be eligible for selection by boards first appointed for the staff corps under terms of the new law providing for equalization of opportunity of promotion among line and staff officers.

Boards at first will be appointed to consider only cases of those staff officers that, on the date of enactment of the law, were serving in ranks lower than grades held by their line running-mates. Officers now considered eligible for consideration for promotion to the next higher ranks are included in the following groups:

For promotion to the rank of captain, 56 officers of the medical corps, from J. C. Thompson to W. N. McDonell on the list of commanders; 39 officers of the supply corps, from J. D. Robnett to H. W. Browning on the list of commanders, and nine officers of the civil engineer corps, from E. H. Brownell to C. D. Thurber on the list of commanders.

Due to Become Commanders.

For promotion to the rank of commander, 76 officers of the medical corps, from Harry Shaw to J. J. A. McMullin on the list of lieutenant commanders, and 40 officers of the supply corps, from Charles R. O'Leary to P. A. Clarke on the list of lieutenant commanders.

After officers in those groups that may be recommended for promotion shall have been commissioned in the next higher ranks, selection boards will be appointed to consider cases of those staff officers that became eligible for consideration for promotion as a result of the recent selection of their line running mates for advancement. Certain staff lieutenant commanders that were made eligible for consideration for promotion to commander upon enactment of the equalization law, now become eligible for consideration for further promotion to the rank of captain by boards to be appointed later.

Table Partly Completed.

Owing to the many factors involved, it has not been possible to complete in the bureau of navigation the table of running mates of staff officers required by the equalization law. The necessity for determination of running mates of those staff officers already eligible for promotion, or that may become eligible therefor in the future, has been recognized, and running mates have been assigned to that extent. The remainder of the table will be completed as soon as practicable and furnished to the service.

A board has been appointed to convene at the Navy Department July 1 to recommend not more than eight officers of the civil engineer corps for promotion to the rank of captain, in accordance with the equalization law. The board will consist of the following, all of that corps: Rear Admiral Harry H. Rousseau, Rear Admiral Charles W. Parks, retired; Rear Admiral Luther E. Gregory and Capts. Richard C. Hollyday, Reuben E. Bakenhus and George A. McKay, with L. A. Morrison as recorder.

Decision has not yet been reached as to dates of meeting of selection boards for the medical and supply corps.

ENGINEER CHIEF

Underwood & Underwood.

MAJ. GEN. EDGAR JADWIN, who yesterday became chief of engineers, succeeding Maj. Gen. Harry Taylor, retired.

GEN. TAYLOR RETIRES AS HEAD OF ENGINEERS

DEAKYNE IS ASSISTANT

Maj. Gen. Harry Taylor, chief of engineers of the army, retired from active service yesterday and Maj. Gen. Edgar Jadwin, formerly assistant chief of engineers, was promoted to chief of the corps. Brig. Gen. Herbert Deakyne was named assistant chief of engineers.

Retirement of Gen. Taylor, because he had reached the age limit of 64 years, prompted high praise of his work by Secretary of War Davis in a letter to him. "I have always," the Secretary said, "been completely justified in the trust and confidence I have reposed in you. Such trust and confidence on the part of your superiors have been constant during your 42 years of active commissioned service."

Gen. Taylor has held almost every type of command in the engineer corps, having seen duty in the Philippines, as district engineer in all sections of the country, and as chief engineer of the American army in France in the world war, where he won a distinguished service medal.

Gen. Jadwin, who succeeds him, was born in Honesdale, Wayne county, Pa., in 1865 and was graduated from the military academy in 1890. He commanded the Fifteenth engineers in France, and was awarded the French Legion of Honor, the British order of the bath and the distinguished service medal. He served in the Spanish-American war and in many posts in the United States prior to the European war, including the office of district engineer in Washington, having had charge, in 1911-12, of the District water supply and public buildings and grounds. He was made assistant chief of engineers in 1924.

Gen. Deakyne was born in Delaware and was also graduated from West Point in 1890. He organized the Nineteenth engineers for the world war and was chief engineer of the second American army. He was assigned to duty here recently from army engineering work in New York harbor.

Rubber Heels in Army Permitted by Britain

London, June 26 (By A. P.).—Heel clicking in the British army as a part of the salute has received a setback by announcement that guardsmen in the London district henceforth are to be allowed to wear rubber heels.

This move is designed to ease the jar of marching, and to make soldier life generally a bit more attractive. Officers, however, say that heel clicking, which became quite the fad during the war in the British army and in the American army in France, will "be missed terribly," for a time at least.

WHEAT PRICES DROP ON LARGER RECEIPTS AT INTERIOR POINTS

Corn, Oats and Rye Lower, the Agriculture Department Reports.

BARLEY HOLDS STEADY WITH LIGHT OFFERINGS

Favorable Weather Conditions and Beneficial Rains Influence Prices.

Increased receipts of new wheat, particularly at interior markets, lowered wheat prices sharply during the week ended yesterday, according to the weekly grain market review of the United States Department of Agriculture. Future prices of corn and oats also worked materially lower, but premiums for cash corn held firm at most markets and cash prices were not much changed. Rye was lower with wheat, but barley held steady.

Weather conditions in the United States were more favorable. Rains were beneficial to the spring wheat crop, particularly later plantings, which constitute a large part of the total acreage. Reports from Kansas and Oklahoma indicate good yields and outturns larger than earlier estimates. Canadian crop conditions were also reported as continuing favorable with crops making good progress. European crop conditions were not materially changed, but crops generally were about 10 days to two weeks late and the outlook is less favorable than last year, when crops were unusually good.

Lower Levels Reached.

Receipts of new hard winter wheat, principally from Oklahoma and southern Kansas, increased at interior markets during the week and prices were forced to sharply lower levels. Exporters were principal buyers, as mills were apparently waiting further premium adjustments. Exporters were bidding 6½c above Chicago September for No. 1 hard winter delivered at gulf ports for ten-day shipment. This would be around $1.39 per bushel based upon Friday's closing prices. Bids for wheat for 20-day shipment were about 1c per bushel less. Commercial stocks of old wheat have been reduced to around 12,500,000 bushels, which is less than half of last year's stocks at the lowest point.

Soft winter wheat prices also declined about 5c during the week, but milling demand was sufficient to absorb light receipts. Southern mills are reported to be grinding some new wheat, but harvesting in Ohio and Indiana is not expected to begin until about July 5.

Spring Wheat Declines.

Premiums for spring wheat also declined and reflected lower prices in the hard winter wheat markets. Twelve per cent protein No. 1 dark Northern sold at the close of the week at Minneapolis at 9-14c above July price; 12½ per cent 10-15c above and 13 per cent 11-16c over. Minneapolis July declined 5⅝c for the week and closed, June 25, at $1.47⅛. There was a good demand for light offerings of durum wheat and No. 1 amber sold at Minneapolis at from about $1.40-$1.56 per bushel, a decline of 5½c for the week.

There was a broad demand for old crop wheat from exporters in the Pacific Northwestern markets, old white wheat selling at Portland at $1.45-$1.45½ per bushel. New crop wheat for first half of August shipment was quoted at $1.38 per bushel and for September at $1.35 per bushel. Export sales for July, August and September shipment were reported to be of good volume. Flour sales to the Orient were also large as a result of the short crop in Manchuria.

Corn Future Prices Drop.

Corn future prices reached the lowest point on the crop at Chicago during the week, but cash grain was relatively firmer, and there was an active demand for current arrivals, which were again smaller than for the previous week. White corn was especially in demand at some of the central Western markets and sold at premiums over yellow at several markets. No. 3 white was quoted at St. Louis at 75 cents and No. 3 yellow at 70 cents; No. 3 white at Kansas City at 70 cents and No. 3 yellow at 72 cents; No. 3 white at Cincinnati at 71 cents and No. 3 yellow at 71 cents.

Favorable crop conditions and continued heavy receipts of new crop oats continued to weaken the oats market, and prices at the close of the week were about 2 cents down from those at the close of the previous week. Stocks in the central Western markets are still fairly large, while offerings of new oats from Texas and Oklahoma into the Southeastern States has restricted demand from that territory for oats from the central West. No. 3 old white oats sold at from 39 to 40 cents at the close of the week at the principal central Western markets.

Barley Market Dull.

The barley market was rather dull in the central West, but the light offerings were well taken. Future prices declined 1¾c at Minneapolis and closed Friday at 61¼c. No. 3 barley was quoted at the close of the week at Milwaukee at 70c to 73c per bushel. Demand for barley in the Pacific Northwest was rather slow, although the crop will likely be smaller than last year, when acreage was increased through replanting of wheat area from which the crop was frozen out. Export barley at Portland, Oreg., was quoted at $29 per ton at the close of the week.

There was also a good export demand for barley in California, with exporters paying as high as $1.90 per 100 pounds for choice shipping barley, which is scarce this year. Grading barley was quoted at $1.40 and feed barley at $1.30 per 100 pounds. English barley markets were also higher with new crop California being quoted c. i. f. at from $2.06 to $2.28 per 100 pounds. California superior new crop was quoted at $1.90 to $1.93 c. i. f. Barley from last year's crop was quoted at $2.01 to $2.12 per 100 pounds.

LOCAL BANKS WORKING FOR STANDARD FORMS

REPORT EXPORTS DROP

By F. W. PATTERSON.

Among the most interesting of the reports presented at the convention of the District Bankers association at Hot Springs last week, was that of the committee on standardized banking forms, of which E. J. McQuade, vice president of the Liberty National Bank, was chairman.

The report was prepared after a year of careful study, which entailed a vast amount of correspondence with numerous State Bankers associations, a review of Department of Commerce reports on the subject of banking forms, Federal reserve reports, and of the recommendations of the Washington Clearing House association as well as those of the clearing house section of the American Bankers association.

The report gave exhibits of the various forms which it was recommended be adopted for use, but in offering them to the association the committee recognized the difficulty of getting banks to discard old equipment until such time as it might not cause too serious a loss, but pointed out that there was a great deal of waste and expense caused by banks using an assortment of shapes, styles and face arrangements for checks. The report covered some 30 pages and gave the standard size of checks, drafts, certificates of deposit, &c., with full details regarding all banking instruments.

It was the hope of the committee that the banks of the District would work gradually toward the adoption of the standard forms, and from the expressions heard with regard to that phase of their recommendation, it is believed that all banks will proceed to bring themselves to the position of being able to standardize.

Local banks are never slow to cooperate in a forward movement, and many of them are now using forms which the American Bankers Association requested be used by banks throughout the country, so it is reasonably certain that the forms as presented by the committee will be adopted by local banks as fast as their present supply of forms is exhausted.

Howard Moran, president of the District Bankers Association, has seen to it that copies of this exhaustive report on the subject of bank forms will be placed in the hands of every bank, and it is believed that he will later bring about action by the association which will assure their use throughout the District.

Members of the committee who labored throughout the year with Mr. McQuade in an endeavor to work out a standard for bank forms, were: J. D. Howard, cashier, Seventh Street Savings Bank; C. F. Jacobsen, cashier, National Metropolitan Bank; Lanier P. McLachlen, president McLachlen Banking Corporation; Frank J. Stryker, president, Columbia National, and E. E. Swan, assistant treasurer, American Security & Trust Co.

Imports Exceed Exports.

America's total visible imports for the first quarter of this year exceeded her exports by $195,168,000, the largest unfavorable balance for a like period in the history of American commerce, according to Dominick & Dominick in their weekly review. This is especially striking since export gains of from 6.1 per cent to 25.9 per cent, as compared with a year ago, were shown in five of the six geographical divisions, only to be offset by a 28 per cent drop in exports to Europe.

The total exports for the quarter decreased 11.5 per cent from the corresponding period last year. The month of May, however, witnessed a return to the large excess of exports to which the country is accustomed. This unfavorable trade balance, says the review, was caused by a decline of 32 per cent in the export of raw materials. Finished manufactures, on the other hand, showed an increase of 15 per cent in exports, the greatest value since 1921.

Since Europe receives on an average about 50 per cent of this country's exports, the increased consumption of other territories was not able to offset the decline in the European demand. Certain temporary factors contributed to the decline, such as a smaller American grain crop and a reduction in foreign demand for cotton. The high prices America paid for rubber also helped to swell the quarter's unfavorable balance.

Taking all these factors into consideration, two facts become evident: First, that as a result of the efforts of every European nation to increase its exports, the continental market will not consume as large a quantity of American goods as in the past two or three years, although it is believed a normal demand will continue. Second, that the best opportunity for larger American exports lies in the markets of South America and the Far East.

These markets are more interested in manufactures than in raw materials. The American manufacturer will himself provide a new demand for raw materials in order to turn out a greater supply of the finished product.

Seek $30,000,000 Loan.

Dillon, Read & Co. are heading a syndicate which will offer tomorrow $30,000,000 United Steel Works Corporation of Germany 6½ per cent gold bonds. This operation constitutes the largest foreign industrial loan so far arranged in this country. Associated with Dillon, Read & Co., at the head of the international distributing syndicate, are the International Acceptance Bank and the J. Henry Schroder Banking Corporation. The bonds mature in 25 years. They are dated June 1, 1926, and will be offered at a price of 96 and accrued interest, to yield about 6.83 per cent. Each bond will bear a nondetachable stock purchase warrant, carrying the right to buy 1,000 Reichmarks of the common stock of the United Steel Works Corporation at $297.50 a share, that is, $125 per cent of par.

The company was organized in January for the purpose of acquiring the principal fixed assets of four leading coal, iron and steel companies in Germany, and upon completion of acquisition of these properties will rank as the largest industrial unit in Europe and the second largest steel company in the world. The opening balance-sheet of the company, after giving effect to the acquisition of assets and assumption of liabilities and the issuance of bonds now to be offered, shows total assets of over $350,000,000. Current assets are $86,799,000, against current liabilities of $16,629,504.

Federal Storage Dividend.

Directors of the Federal Storage Co. have declared the regular quarterly dividend of 2 per cent on the preferred stock, payable July 15, to stockholders of record June 30.

Market Dividend.

The Washington Market Co. has declared the regular quarterly dividend of $1.50 a share.

Praises Words of Press.

"Had we not received from the press, the representatives of the Washington newspapers, the most earnest cooperation in presenting to our banks and the public the many intricate problems which came before them during the year, we would not have been as successful in what has been accomplished," began the resolution presented by Charles J. Bell, chairman of the committee on resolutions, at the convention of the District Bankers association in Hot Springs, Va., last week. The resolution concluded with these words: "They have always given unlimited time and space to our work and we have appreciated their friendly cooperation."

Serving with President Bell, of the American Security & Trust Co., on the resolutions committee, were: Harry V. Haynes, president Farmers & Mechanics National Bank; L. A. Slaughter, vice president Commercial National Bank; Lanier P. McLachlen, president McLachlen Banking Corporation, and F. E. Farrington, president Chevy Chase Savings Bank.

WARN COAL DEALERS TO APPEAR AT INQUIRY

thority of either house of Congress to give testimony or to produce papers upon any matter under inquiry before either house of Congress," the law under which the committee plans to proceed reads, "wilfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the question under inquiry, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor."

Should the dealers fail to respond, Senator Capper, chairman of the Senate District committee, plans, it was learned, to present the facts to Vice President Dawes, of the Senate. The presiding officer in turn would be directed to present them to District Attorney Gordon for prosecution.

The authority of a committee of Congress to subpena witnesses was challenged in the oil and Daugherty cases, and the issue is still pending before the courts.

The six dealers who have been subpenaed are the J. Maury Dove Co., W. H. Hessick, W. W. Griffiths Coal Corporation, Blick Brothers, R. J. and M. C. Grace and William King & Sons. These dealers were selected merely because of their representative capacity, it was pointed out, in order that the committee can determine generally whether the local coal trade profiteered during the recent coal strike.

Lockhart, Auto Racer, Must Keep Contract

(By the Associated Press.)

Frank Lockhart, Western driver who won the Indianapolis speedway automobile race, has been notified by the American Automobile association's contest board that he must fulfill a contract to race at Abilene, Tex., July 5, under threat of suspension from the A. A. A. meets.

The board asserted that after the victory at Indianapolis Lockhart wanted to cancel the Abilene agreement, made prior to that race. It also asserted that "his first taste of fame made him forget the dirt track contests" and that with his Indianapolis victory he had been asked to appear in a collar advertisement and "at least four offers to drive new speedway cars were made to him." Lockhart is racing in Detroit today and notification of the board's rule was sent to him there.

MAY TRADE BALANCE FAVORABLE TO U. S.

(By the Associated Press.)

Finished manufactured products continued to lead exports of the United States during May, while crude materials led imports. An analysis of last month's foreign trade, announced yesterday by the Commerce Department, placed final value of exports at $356,621,000 and imports at $321,029,000. Compared with May, 1925, exports were:

Finished manufactures, $170,781,000 as against $162,708,000 in May, 1925; crude materials, $67,383,000 against $65,973,000; semi-manufactures, $50,707,000 against $58,818,000; manufactured foodstuffs, $34,053,000 against $41,161,000, and crude foodstuffs and food animals, $25,155,000 against $33,625,000.

Imports were, crude materials, $128,109,000 against $136,241,000; finished manufactures, $63,022,000 against $60,890,000; semimanufactures, $61,059,000 against $56,320,000; crude foodstuffs and food animals, $35,908,000 against $24,168,000, and manufactured foodstuffs, $32,931,000 against $39,900,000.

PAN-AMERICAN OFFICES NOT TO LEAVE CAPITAL

URGED BY NICARAGUAN

Panama, June 26 (By A. P.).—An effort to have the headquarters of the Pan-American Union in Washington moved to Panama was defeated by the Pan-American congress here just before its adjournment.

The proposal, introduced by Gutterrez Navas, Nicaraguan delegate, was withdrawn upon the urgent request of Senor Garay of Panama, who opposed the proposal on the grounds that there were too many political and economic impediments to the move and that it might be interpreted as a lack of confidence in North America. The Panaman delegation at the same time expressed its gratitude to Nicaragua for the intended compliment.

During yesterday's session of the Congress the American delegation apologized to the conference for not voting on political measures. It was explained that the United States understood that the nature of the meeting was purely commemorative and that consequently no instructions had been given on political matters.

The corner stone of the Bolivarian university was formally laid in the presence of a delegation from the congress.

One of the most important actions which the congress took during its sessions was approval of a proposal to establish an American league of nations. The congress, which was held in commemoration of the centenary of the first Pan-American congress called by Simon Bolivar, was attended by three American representatives, Dr. William Jennings Price, Dr. Charles W. Hackett and Senator Vernon Richardson of Kentucky.

Lynchburg Wins Point In Car Fare Fight

Special to The Washington Post.

Lynchburg, Va., June 26.—Judge Henry C. McDowell, in Federal district court here today, denied the application of the Lynchburg Traction & Light Co. for a permanent injunction against the city of Lynchburg which is demanding a reduction in street car fares in the territory annexed January 1.

The city wants the company to reduce car fares in the annexed districts to 5 cents to conform with the city ordinance. Judge McDowell held that the Federal courts have no jurisdiction and dismissed the petition without prejudice to the company. The company raised the car fare in the county to 6 cents in 1922.

SCOTT, FOUND SANE, FACES DEATH AGAIN

gone to the insane asylum, taken a man out and asked a jury to hang him.

Scott and his brother Robert were accused of shooting a drug clerk in a holdup two years ago. Robert recently was found serving a sentence in a California prison and returned here and is now awaiting trial for the same murder. Russell was convicted, although he charged that Robert did the shooting during a drinking party at the drug store.

Russell was sentenced to be hanged but later received a reprieve and then was given a second reprieve when a fake message signed with his brother's name was received from Detroit in which the writer assumed responsibility for the slaying. Finally, on the night before Scott was to have been hanged, his attorney asked for a sanity hearing. A jury declared him insane and last August he was sent to the asylum. Last month State alienists decided he is now sane.

Scott heard the verdict without apparent emotion. When court adjourned he walked with two bailiffs to the bull-pen to be taken to the county jail where three times previously he has awaited the gallows. His attorney immediately moved for a new trial and the hearing was set for July 3. If this motion is denied the court will fix a new date for Scott's execution.

It is not believed there can be an appeal to the supreme court on the sanity hearing. The court does not convene until October.

Thomas Scott, Russell's father, who has worked for months to save his sons from the noose, stood alone, a pitiable figure when court had adjourned. "What do I think of it?" he repeated. "What can I think of it."

Jacob Maurer, father of the slain drug clerk, also was in court. "The verdict speaks for itself," was his comment. Robert Scott goes on trial Monday for the same murder.

Woman Badly Hurt by Truck.

Special to The Washington Post.

Danville, Va., June 26.—Mrs. Otha Stone, 20, of Stacy, N. C., is in a critical condition at a hospital here as a result of being run over today by a truck belonging to J. Jefferson Penn, tobacco man of Rockingham county, N. C., on the Reidsville road. Mrs. Stone, witnesses say, had just left a store at Stacy, when she stepped into the road and was run down.

SENATORS ASSAIL FENNING'S GUARDIANSHIP PRACTICE

tect them, and therefore Congress ought to by this legislation," Senator Dill, of Washington, declared, referring to the question of leaving the matter to the courts.

Senator Robinson, saying he was sorry Mr. Fenning's name had entered the discussion, said the House provision undoubtedly was aimed at him. It is the case, he said, "of a man who is a commissioner of the District of Columbia, and who, at the same time, is a professional guardian for the wards of the veterans' bureau. In spite of sentimental considerations and the patriotic considerations that underlie the case of every man who is a ward of this government * * * we have an instance of a commissioner of the District of Columbia, acting as a professional guardian for wards of the veterans' bureau, making money out of their misfortune. It is not the case of a man who is willing to make a sacrifice and render service and to receive a reasonable compensation for it, but the case of a man who goes out and solicits the opportunity."

The whole "proposition" was revolting, Senator Robinson declared, adding that any one who wanted to take the provision from the bill aimed directly at that practice, could vote to do so, but he would demand a record vote.

Caraway Joins Denunciation.

"I don't think any self-respecting man can approve any thing that he did in connection with those matters. I am astonished that anybody should ever at any time have offered any word of palliation. It seems to me to be the most unthinking thing that a man, right at the capital of the nation, should take advantage of those unfortunate people, who more than died for their country, who gave up their minds."

"Whenever you ask anyone about it," Senator Caraway continued, "he says 'You ought to have made the law so that I could not have stolen. Congress is to blame because you did not make it impossible for me to do wrong.

"That has been the excuse of every one of them. That is the answer of the veterans' bureau, that is the answer of the Justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, that is the answer of Dr. White, that is the answer of Fenning and that is the answer of every one of the rest of them. When we catch them redhanded, they say, 'You ought to have made the law so that I could not have been corrupted, and therefore I shift the responsibility.' That is their only defense."

Reed Not Defending Practice.

Senator Reed interrupted to say: "We are all agreed that these things should not go on. I must say, as far as the Fenning case goes, that the audits of his accounts show them all to be in good order."

"Good order," exclaimed Senator Caraway. "The money in his pocket, and the patient in the asylum."

"I am not defending it; I am merely trying to state the case accurately," replied Senator Reed.

When Senator Reed said that "there may be another Fenning turned up in Arkansas or some other State," Senator Caraway rejoined:

"No; God never created two like that."

Senator Dill, urging the House provision, declared that "Congress can not reach the courts, but the Congress can reach the director if he does not protect these people in his charge."

Veterans' Bureau Assailed.

Senator Caraway declared that he thought the veterans' bureau "chargeable with the grossest neglect of its wards," adding that he had not heard a "single citizen anywhere excuse the failure of the veterans' bureau to take any step to protect the unfortunate in its charge. I have not heard anybody attempt to excuse the conduct of Fenning, and I have not heard a word of commendation, to put it as strongly as I may, of the position of one of the judges of the Supreme court of the District of Columbia."

"Everybody who has ever had any experience, who has had any personal knowledge of Dr. White," he continued, "knows the kind of man he is. I have been curious all my life to know why Ananias and Sapphira should have been struck dead, and so-called legal experts allowed to live. I refer to experts who go into court and swear for a consideration."

Senator McKellar, asserting that he was a "great believer in courts," said "but when a court permits an unfaithful guardian who comes in and confesses that he is unfaithful and confesses that he has taken the money of his wards, and permits that guardian to pay back the money and does not remove him, I think it would be the part of wisdom to have this additional provision in the bill."

The House provision was defended by Senator Swanson on the grounds that it would keep the wholesale professional guardian from continuing to receive his fees while the veterans' bureau fought the case out in the courts.

House Provision Defended.

"I can not see," he said, "why the director of the veterans' bureau should not have the right to say in the Fenning case, which is a case of professional guardianship given by favoritism and influence, that there are too many cases for one man to handle and that no one man can take proper care of that number of cases."

Senator Heflin said that Mr. Fenning, having 100 wards in his charge, "goes out twice a month to visit them. What can a man do talking to more than 100 of these boys? Can he cheer them up and say a word of comfort to them and try to do something to benefit them in a two-hours visit twice a month?

"Let us see what he is getting for that service Here is one case of Edgar William Barber. He has collected out of him since 1920 $1,249. Here is John A. Beadley. He has collected out of him since June, 1921, $1,262. * * * It is said that this man has grown rich out of this sort of work. Am I to sit here and permit Congress to adjourn and let somebody whitewash this thing in order to say that there was nothing wrong?"

Incidentally, it developed during the debate the established fact, that Congress has enacted a law providing that guardians do not have to be appointed for veterans in any government institution, but that their compensation may be paid directly to the hospital or distributed among dependents in case there are any.

ment of Agriculture. Senator Fess' amendment provides for an appropriation of $100,000,000 to be loaned to cooperative organizations.

"Under this act," said Senator Fess in explaining his amendment, "loans may be made to cooperative marketing associations under contractual arrangements providing for gradual payment through an amortization charged against the commodity marked by the association.

"For example, an amortization charge of ½ cent a bushel upon a volume of business of 200,000,000 bushels of wheat will repay a loan of $20,000,000 including interest, in 15 years, or some such period. I have not the exact calculation before me at the moment. Such a loan would enable a major farmer-controlled, grain-marketing organization to acquire the necessary facilities for both domestic and foreign trade, and also provide the working capital it would require. And such a loan could be used to great advantage by cotton, tobacco and other cooperatives.

"In other words, such a loan makes available capital they require at once, the capital without which they can not function effectively or on a large scale, and there is no other source from which such capital can be obtained. It is sorely needed, but it can not be obtained today from commercial banks or intermediate credit banks because of the character of the security required by those banks.

"I consider these amortized loans reasonably safe. There is nothing more certain than the annual movement of agricultural commodities to market.

"An amortization charge places no burden on the farmer who is a member of a cooperative association, because it will be more than made up by the economies in marketing, that result from large scale cooperative marketing. A half-cent a bushel on wheat can be saved many times over by a strong cooperative through the absorption of the present legitimate profit of the middleman.

"The principal of amortized loans has been applied with outstanding success by the Federal Land Banks, and it can be employed safely and most effectively by the marketing board for which my amendment provides."

Adoption of the Fess amendment implies passage by the Senate of the House bill which is the bill serving as the vehicle for the various riders, including the defeated Haugen rider. If the Senate should adopt the Fess amendment, it would be necessary for the House to accept it before it could become a law. The Senate bill, with the amendment, would be threshed out by the Senate and House conferees.

Until President Coolidge intervened, the prospects for passing the Fess bill in the Senate were virtually nil. The question now is whether the President can line up enough support for the amendment to overcome the opposition which has formed against it.

Corn Belt Board Called In Defeat of McNary Bill

Des Moines, Iowa, June 26 (By A. P.).—The corn belt committee of 22, which worked through the winter in Washington in behalf of farm relief measures will be called for another conference as a result of the defeat of the McNary bill.

Gov. John Hammill, of Iowa, chairman of the corn belt meeting here last January, in announcing he would issue the call, declared "the fight for farm relief must go on more vigorously than ever in order to assure results."

Defeat of the McNary bill was "a mistake on the part of Congres," he said. "We must not be discouraged at the temporary defeat, as by united efforts results can be obtained."

He stated the conference will be called "at the first opportunity."

Tincher Says Politicians Threatening Farm Relief

(By the Associated Press.)

Discussing farm relief in a radio address last night, Representative Tincher (Republican), Kansas, one of the sponsors of the bill indorsed Friday by President Coolidge, declared that if effective remedial legislation is not enacted by Congress "the blame will rest upon the heads of irresponsible lobbyists, and those who seek to play politics with so great a problem as the farm problem."

Referring to the measure which he championed in the House, and Senator Fess (Republican), Ohio has offered in the Senate, the Kansan, a member of the House agricultural committee, said:

"It makes available funds, not to loan to farmers direct, but to arrange with organizations of farmers to take off the market the surplus, hold it and market it in an orderly manner. It is not a subsidy. There is a precedent for it in our own country. It was a success when administered as it was under the war finance act. If the administration is permitted to have the law, and it fails, the blame will be upon them."

Mr. Tincher assailed members of the corn belt committee for their activity in behalf of the equalization fee plan, rejected by both House and Senate, declaring they have been insisting that there be no farm legislation unless they write it and o. k. it. He appealed to Democrats in Congress to lay aside partisanship and support the administration proposal.

FRENCH WOULD STOP GORGING BY TOURISTS

MAY CLOSE NIGHT CLUBS

(Special Cable Dispatch.)

Paris, June 26.—There is a noisy gunning in France for the tourist goose that lays dozens of golden eggs every summer.

The intense agitation over Joseph Caillaux and his threatened economic measures which are believed to include provisions for closing night clubs has fired the imagination of elements to whom the presence of thousands of tourists, chiefly American, who are profiting by the depreciated currency bought with good dollars and pounds, is anathema.

The Xenophone Press, blind to the healing balm of gold that tourists bring, today was filled with cries that the economy program, which every Frenchman confidently expects to hit somebody else, has not hit where directed—at the tourists hordes. The Press calls for measures to close the establishments which constitute a

INDUSTRIALS RECOVER FROM EARLY REACTION

STEEL SLIGHTLY HIGHER

Special to The Washington Post.

New York, June 26.—After an early reaction, industrial shares recovered substantially in today's half session on the New York Stock Exchange. Profit-taking sales accounted for the early depression, but practically the whole industrial list gained when offerings had been absorbed. Railroad stocks, on the other hand, moved very little, although the tone remained strong. Trading was dull on the whole and in small volume, with its turnover just topping 450,000 shares.

To all appearances this two-hour session was to usher in a series of uninteresting summertime abbreviated Saturday markets. The early moderate reaction was followed by an hour of extreme dullness, which in turn gave way to a recovery in the course of which a number of industrials were taken in hand in a constructive way late in the session.

To a considerable extent there was a tendency to explain the initial heaviness by reference to the weekly trade reviews, which showed uncertainty over the general trade situation. The mere fact, however, that reports coming in from the various trades indicate conflicting tendencies would seem to leave room for further bullish activity in the stocks of favored industries. At this stage of a substantial recovery in stock prices a movement to separate the good from the indifferent usually comes in.

The trade reviews were quickly forgotten when the market started to come back from the early lows. The thing that has kept the bear element cautious and has heartened bullishly inclined traders has been the extreme dullness of the market on all recessions. There was another indication of this tendency in today's small market.

Woolworth, Kresge and other merchandising stocks were sold quite freely in the early dealings, and they carried off with them quite a miscellaneous list of industrials including such stocks as Simmons Bed, Coca Cola, Liggett & Myers B and International Combustion Engineering. These stocks recovered slowly after the spell of dullness and the first named closed more than a point net lower, and Coca Cola off 2¼. Pullman, Electric Auto Light, Federal Mining & Smelting preferred, Western Union, Cast Iron Pipe, Brooklyn Union Gas and American Snuff were others which failed to make up losses ranging from 1 to 3 points.

Similarly United States Rubber common sold down a point on the first few sales, disappeared from the market for a long time and then regained a point just as quickly as it had lost it. Steel common was slightly higher, along with American Smelting, General Motors, Willys-Overland, Pennsylvania, Baltimore & Ohio and American Agricultural Chemical preferred. Commercial Solvents B gained 4¼ points.

There were, on the other hand, miscellaneous stocks which ignored the market's trend, or lack of it, from the start. They were stocks apparently in which special buying was being done, among them Mexican Seaboard Oil, Union Oil of California, Case Threshing Machine, Hudson Motors, Union Bag & Paper, Tobacco Products and United Cigar Stores. Another was Goodyear preferred, which gained 2⅞ on a fairly large turnover.

In the foreign exchange market dealings were light, yet some important rate changes were made, mostly on a rising scale. Sterling remained firm. French francs gained 3 points and Belgian 1 point, while the so-called neutrals also improved in most instances. Lire yielded 2 points and Norwegian kroner 3 points. Pesetas closed 7 points higher.

Bank Clearings Drop Below Preceding Week

Bank clearings at leading cities of the United States for the week ended June 24 aggregated $9,378,850,000, a loss of 5.2 per cent from last week, but a gain of 7 per cent over the like week of last year. Outside of New York the total was $3,939,850,000, a decrease of 5.9 per cent from last week, but an increase of 6.8 per cent from this week a year ago. New York showed a loss of 7.1 per cent from last year, according to Bradstreet's. Forty-one cities reported increases over last year, while 8 disclosed losses. Philadelphia reported a gain of 14 per cent; Boston, 7.8 per cent; San Francisco, 11.4 per cent; Pittsburgh, 5.2 per cent; Detroit, 13 per cent; Los Angeles, 17.6 per cent; St. Louis, 4.3 per cent; Kansas City, 11 per cent; Cleveland, 4.4 per cent; Baltimore, 1 per cent; Minneapolis, 4 per cent; Cincinnati, 2.7 per cent, and New Orleans, 6.2 per cent. Chicago displayed a loss of 1 per cent and Atlanta, 14.7 per cent.

Bank debits at 44 leading cities for the week ended June 23, as reported to Bradstreet's, totaled $10,509,679,000, a gain of 2.8 per cent over last week and 12.9 per cent over the like week a year ago.

BOOT TO BOOT SETS NEW RECORD AT LATONIA

Bradley Colt Beats Out Rhinock

Phanariot Is Winner of Canadian Derby.

Captain Hal Takes Fairmount Race. Whitney Wins.

LATONIA, Ky., June 26 (By A. P.).—Boot to Boot, the 3-year-old colt of the Idlehour farm, showed he is a remarkable thoroughbred when he established a new track record for the Latonia course today by running 1 mile and 70 yards in 1:41 3-5, one-fifth of a second faster than the former mark.

The time of Boot to Boot was just a second behind the American record held by Winnipeg, at Maple Heights.

Rhinock finished second to Boot to Boot and Kentucky Cardinal third. Three others started. The race was for a purse of $1,500.

Fort Erie, Ontario, June 26 (By A. P.).—The Seagram stable's Phanariot today won the Canadian derby, the feature of the Niagara Racing association's closing day program. Phanariot was the race over the mile and a quarter course for 3-year-olds, foaled in Canada, which carried with it a $5,000 purse.

Tattling and Haplite were scratched.

Collinsville, Ill., June 26 (By A. P.).—Captain Hal won the Jefferson Hotel handicap, $5,000 added, the feature race at the Fairmount track this afternoon. Time for the 1⅛ miles was 1:52 1-5, a new track record. Cudgeller was second and Princess Pan was third. All other entries were scratched.

New York, June 26 (By A. P.). Harry Payne Whitney's Pantella, McAtee up, won the Great American stakes, $5,000 added, for 2-year-olds, the feature event at Aqueduct track today. Contemplate was second and Witchmount, also of the Whitney stable, was third. Pantella covered the 5 furlongs in 0:59 4-5.

Buenos Aires, June 26 (By A. P.).—Lombardo, who won the triple crown of the Argentine turf in 1924, was today purchased for 150,000 pesos by Carlos Luro and Tomas Lyons. Lombardo will be placed in the stud. (The gold peso is worth about $1.)

Severn Nine Defeats Annapolis Sailors, 2-1

Annapolis, Md., June 26.—Baseball teams of the Severn Athletic club and the U. S. naval hospital were the contestants in a fine game at the Severn park this afternoon, Severn winning, 2 to 1. It was a pitcher's duel, and Wilson, of the Hospital nine, had a shade the better of Munsen until the eighth.

In that frame Munsen drew a base, Phipps singled and "Jimmie" Williams, captain and star backstop, drove both runners home on a slashing two-bagger. The Hospital team got its one run in the sixth on a free pass to Dellinger, who stole second and scored on Fitch's single. Each pitcher allowed six hits. Wilson fanned seven and Munsen four. Severn will play Mohawk A. C., of Washington, here tomorrow.

Callan Scores Surprise Victory

Diplomats Defeated as First Round Is Completed.

By JUNO KINERK.

AN unusual busy and progressive day, despite the fact that a short shower in midafternoon halted play for a half hour, marked the opening day's play in the thirtieth annual District of Columbia tennis tourney, which opened on the Dumbarton courts yesterday. Virtually all of the preliminary round of matches were concluded, as were several of the initial round battles.

While none of the seeded players got into action yesterday, all of them will be obliged to show their stuff some time today, for matches are scheduled from early morning until late afternoon in an attempt to clear the card of all first and second round contests.

A RECORD field of 86 players was entered in the singles, but many of these fell by the wayside yesterday and had to take their satisfaction in knowing that they at least put up a great fight to continue, for a majority of the matches were well played and hard fought affairs.

In only one case yesterday did an upset occur, and that was a decided one. The 18-year-old Kip Callan did the upsetting when he took the measure of A. O. D. Hertelendy, secretary of the Hungarian legation, who was regarded as having a fine chance of reaching the quarter finals at least. Callan's victory was scored in a bitter three-set match, and was well won and earned.

Members of two other foreign legations also fared the same fate as the Hungarian. Eugenio Anzorena, of the Mexican legation, bowed to Kenneth Abrams, a member of the George Washington university net squad, while Clarence Young, of the Chinese legation, was eliminated by R. W. Patterson. Young also went three sets before losing, as did Anzorena.

In addition to the foreign diplomats, the only member of Congress represented in the tourney also went out of the picture when the Hon. Hamilton Fish, a former football star at Harvard a decade ago, and now a representative from New New York, bowed to F. W. Whiting.

BOB BURWELL, Capt. Gore, and A. O. White, in charge of the tourney, handled the bulky field in fine fashion and were elated with the progress made yesterday. Burwell, the general chairman, announced that he hoped to have the singles tourney in the quarter finals Tuesday and the finals Thursday.

Entries for the doubles event will be received until 6 o'clock tomorrow, when the pairings will be made. The first round will be started Tuesday. The finals in the doubles probably will be played Saturday, if present plans and the weather do not miscarry.

MACKS LOSE AGAIN TO NATS

The fielding features of the game were Joe Harris' shoestring catch of Galloway's fly to short right and Joe Judge's stop of Poole's bounder down the first base line.

Washington got its first run in the second inning when Joe Harris was hit by Walberg. Judge topped a ball toward first and Walberg threw it into right field, which enabled Joe Harris to get to third. Bluege singled to left, scoring Moon. Peck dumped down a sacrifice and Ruel singled, but Johnson was out on a ball in front of the plate.

JOE HARRIS scored the second run. He started the fourth with a single to left. He was sacrificed along by Judge. Then Bluege was ticked by a pitched ball. Peck popped out, but Ruel got a hit to deep left center. Harris got home, but Bluege was trapped between third and the plate and run down.

Goslin's triple was not wasted in the sixth for, despite the fact that the side went out one, two three behind him, Judge lifted a long fly to bring him home.

Philadelphia accumulated its first run in the seventh. Dykes was hit by Johnson. French popped to Peck. Poole hit along the first-base line and Judge made the throw to second in time to force Dykes. Galloway dumped a ball through Bluege, coming in. Johnson hit Hale, batting for Walberg, filling the bases. With the count three and nothing, Marberry was sent in and he walked Bishop, forcing Poole. Cochrane grounded out, second to first.

In the ninth, Marberry walked French and Poole. Wambsgans, batting for Galloway, sacrificed them along. Perkins, batting for Pate, brought in French. Bishop walked, but the game was over when Cochrane popped to Stanley Harris.

advice. But these could not be verified.

Borotra's activities on the court were an indication that he desired to spare her all possible exertion and he almost alone seemed capable of defeating the two across the net.

Vincent Richards, due to start with Howard Kinsey in the second round of the doubles, was also tardy in appearing, and it seemed for a time that this crack American team might have to forfeit. The American management offered the opposing pair, E. L. Jones and J. L. Carr, a walkover, but the Englishmen declined to accept.

It was explained later that the trouble was due to a misunderstanding regarding the time of play on Richard's part, and he and Kinsey finally went in and downed their opponents by the score of 6—1, 6—2, 6—2.

The American contingent took part in only three matches today. The feature of these was the upset of Mrs. Molla Mallory and Mrs. Marion Jessup, who were defeated in the second round of the women's doubles by Miss Joan Fry and Mrs. M. F. Hazel, Great Britain, 6—3, 6—2.

THE mixed doubles class reached an interesting stage through the victory of Kinsey and Miss Mary K. Browne, over E. T. Stowe, and Mrs. M. G. Broadbridge in the first round. The American pair will now meet Borotra and Mlle. Lenglen in the second round.

The defeat of Mrs. Jessup and Mrs. Mallory came as a surprise to many who believed that the noted international players would surely reach a place among the last eight teams. The critics noted that Mrs. Jessup was off her usual brisk game, and was apparently unwilling to exert herself, and was at the same time inaccurate in her deep court drives and service.

Giants Not Out of Running,

□□□ INJURED VETS RETURN □□□

Manager McGraw Declares

By JOHN J. McGRAW.
Manager, New York Giants.

NEW YORK, June 26.—While the Cardinals and Pirates have shown their punch and are generally assuming the positions that I prophesied for them before the season started, there has been much disappointment over the Giants. In fact, I have been surprised at the outright concern over the showing of our club throughout the country. Two years ago everybody seemed anxious to have the Giants and the Yanks beaten. This was due, of course, to their having won so consistently and having had three or four worlds' series in succession in New York.

Now, though, we are getting anxious inquiries from all over the circuit as to what is the matter with the Giants. Fans outside of New York are actually sympathetic.

The trouble is quite apparent and, I think, in time we will overcome it. The Giants are not out of the race by any means. A good winning streak would run us up as rapidly as did that great spurt of the Cardinals in the East.

This is by far the prettiest race we have had in years in the National league. Its closeness has been a great spur to interest in the game.

THE beginning of the troubles in our club was in the many accidents to our regulars during the first month. At one time we had six of them out of the game. On top of that the pitchers got out of gear, due principally, in my opinion, to the unusual spring weather. All the Eastern clubs were particularly affected that way.

Then to add to the complications George Kelly hurt his knee ten days ago by running into a concrete wall while chasing a foul fly. This happened right in the midst of a short winning streak. Kelly's absence from first always affects our club. He is so dependable that his mere presence steadies the whole infield.

Eddie Farrell has been doing well during the long absence of Travis Jackson and will improve as he goes, but veterans are always missed.

Instead of being discouraged, I am becoming encouraged now. The injured players are returning to the game and the pitchers are working into form.

The Giants will be in the fight for some time to come, and I stick to my early predictions that the real contenders at the finish will be the Pirates, the Cardinals and the Giants. I doubt if the Reds, with their lack of punch and a recent weakness in pitching, can keep up their present standing.

The showing of the Cardinals in the East during the recent invasion is one of the remarkable features of this season's topsy-turvy race. Hornsby's club has a great baseball spirit now and will be hard to beat any time. It is a great thing for the fans of St. Louis.

A disappointment and a surprise in the American league has been the unsettled form of the Nationals. I believe, though, that they will also strike a real stride and come back.

FANS are beginning to realize now that the Chicago White Sox were overlooked in the spring calculations. Despite all the discussion of Washington, the Athletics and the Yanks, the White Sox have hammered away steadily. There is no doubt about them being a genuinely dangerous factor.

Cleveland is another club to work up gradually without attracting a great deal of attention over the country. Tris Speaker has built with wonderful judgment and skill. Moreover, he has taken his time about it—the only way it can be done.

It is difficult to say just now what will be the effect of Connie Mack's big deal by which he sacrifices a little hitting for another reliable pitcher. Ehmke is a good man and the experiment will be watched with interest.

The Yanks are holding their own by hard, straightaway hitting. They will stay up there just as long as the batters continue to hit the ball. Even occasional misplays won't affect them. Huggins has a great natural hitting club there. And, when all is said and done, base hits make runs. Runs win ball games. It gives a manager a great feeling of comfort to have a hitting club that doesn't let a small lead or an occasional bad play bother them. I have had a couple of those hard-hitting clubs and know how to appreciate them.

As I suspected two weeks ago there were not many trades made before the end of the swapping season. That explains the large number of college boys signed. I feel fortunate in having landed my full share of the stars. These boys all look good. As I said a week ago the college player of today is a much better ball player than those of ten years ago. They are all going to get plenty of chances before this season is over. Every manager I have seen is pleased with his new college talent.

TO illustrate how baseball always brings out a new point of interest, entirely unsuspected, the fans over the country already are protesting over the league rule which prohibits the players from engaging in bunting practice or any of those interesting bits of action on the sidelines during the regular fielding and batting practice before a game.

The enforcement of this rule has kept dozens of players idle while the regular team goes through its work on the diamond, which is not a good thing. The fan has missed the action.

This rule was adopted to prevent the possible injury of spectators in the stands. I feel sure that it will be rescinded, because it takes so much from the pleasure of an afternoon at the ball park.

In one park—St. Louis, I believe—a ball bunted in practice hit a spectator and a damage suit resulted. Such accidents can be avoided if the players will confine their practice to hitting the ball away from the stand. At times they have become careless and felt so proficient that they bunted the ball toward the stand instead of away from it.

It would be unfortunate to put a complete stop to these entertaining antics before the game. For that reason I feel sure that the league order will be rescinded, or, at least, amended. Some players are so adept in doing tricks with the bat and with their fielding and throwing in these little side plays that many spectators look forward to it as a real side[show]. The players get to [be] as g[ood] [a]s circus jugglers.

TAYLOR FAILS TO REPORT HERE

By FRANK H. YOUNG.

OUTFIELDER DAN TAYLOR, recently obtained from the Bisons, failed to show up yesterday at the Georgia Avenue stadium as was expected, which peeved Manager Bucky Harris not a little. Not that the newest Nat was needed, but on general principles the Washington pilot can not figure why a rookie should not try to break some world speed records in hustling to join a big league club.

Instead of the player himself, Stanley received a telegram from Dan stating that he wanted to visit his home in Pittsburgh before reporting here, and that he would be on hand Monday. Harris' reply was short and sweet, telling the rookie that if he couldn't so arrange his affairs to enable him to reach here in time to take the train for Boston tonight, he wouldn't be missed if he forgot to report at all.

Taylor may be given a chance to play in games in which opposing southpaws are working, Bucky stated last night. "They tell me this lad is especially strong against the fork-handers and, if this is true, I certainly will get some use out of him. Although it is generally taken for granted that right-handed hitters can consistently hit left-handed pitchers, this has not proven to be the case on the Washington club, and Taylor may be just the kind of handy man we have needed all season."

WALTER RUETHER will do the Nat flinging against the Mackmen at the Georgia Avenue stadium, with Sammy Gray likely to be his mound opponent. The Harriemen have now beaten the A's three straight and crave to make it four today. Should they do so, the best the Quakers can get for the remainder of the season is an even break with them, for the teams meet but 22 times and yesterday's was victory No. 10 for the Capital citians.

The writer yesterday received a letter from Hal Smith, who was with the Nats last fall and at the Tampa training camp this spring. The tall one is now flinging a bit for Peoria of the Three-Eye league. He strongly recommended a pitcher for the Harrismen—a lad by the name of Hal Smith, whom he says is good, boasting of speed, control, a good curve and everything.

And to prove his claims, he enclosed a clipping, showing that in Smith's eveleth victory in a dozen starts, he shut out Danville, allowing but eight scattered hits, walking four and fanning six. This is respectfully called to Manager Harris' attention.

Connie Mack announced yesterday that he had withdrawn his protest of the second game of the double-header which the Nats won from his team in Philadelphia Thursday. The protest was made because the umpires allowed Dykes but two bases of his blow in the second inning which should have gone as a homer. "As Washington beat us, whether the blow in question was a four-bagger or not, I have written president Johnson withdrawing my protest," he stated yesterday, proving that he is a good sport.

BOB POLEN, Lake Placid semipro pitcher, who is working out with the Nationals, is too green and inexperienced to break in the majors just yet, Manager Harris expressed himself yesterday. The lad, a right-hander, will be on hand today, however, helping pitch to the Washington batters in practice before the game.

Our child leader is again having trouble with the finger, which he injured just before the world's series last fall. At the start of this season it was bothering him, but apparently healed up. Several blows on it in recent games, however, have made it as sore as a boil and Stanley had to play yesterday's game with it lying on the back of his glove.

What's become of the little monkey suits which the umpires draped around themselves at the start of the season? The "guessers" were given such a razzing when they wore them in the Philadelphia opener that they probably have given them to the Salvation Army or some other needy, but not particular, organization.

By fanning three yesterday—Simmons twice—Johnson brought his all-time strike-out figures to 3,375.

Immediately after this afternoon's game, the Nats will hike to the Union station, where they will climb on board the Federal express for Boston. Three games will be played at the Hub, with a stopover at New York scheduled for Thursday, when the Yankees will be met in a double-header.

According to information received at The Post last night, Bullet Joe Bush, recently given his unconditional release by the Nationals, has signed with the Douglas team of the "Millionaires league," which plays semipro ball around Boston. Six teams, each backed by wealthy fans, make up this circuit, W. G. Shuster, who sent Pitcher Hadley to Washington, being the Douglas team's backer.

WASHINGTON CANOEISTS STAGE AND WIN REGA

Havens Winner of Tilt; Races Contested Stubbornly.

THE Washington Canoe club sponsored and won a regatta yesterday under the auspices of the Middle States Canoe association in competition with five other clubs. Paddlers of the host club far outclassed all rivals in the event on the Potomac and scored 47 points, 21 more than the Potomac and Philadelphia clubs, which tied for second place with 26 points each.

The regetta introduced the competitive water sports season in Washington and drew a throng to the riverside near Aqueduct bridge. Thirteen events on the program were stubbornly contested for the most part, with the host club dominating virtually every race.

Washington Canoe club, victorious representatives in the senior four double blade events of the 1924 Olympics ,triumphed in that event yesterday with the Philadelphia club second. Karl Knight, Harry Knight, C. W. Havens and H. Miller were in the winning boat.

POINT SCORE.

Washington C. C.	47
Potomac B. C.	26
Philadelphia C. C.	26
Pendleton C. C.	16

A FEATURE of the meet was the scoring of the Pendleton Canoe club, of Ridgewater, N. J., which was represented by a two-man team, which amassed 16 points. Riedel and Hutchinson scored frequently for the Pendleton club, the former taking first in the junior one-man single blade race and the senior one-man double blade event.

The Old Dominion club, of Alexandria, scored one point in the meet as a result of the finish in third place of Young and Hulfish in the junior tandem double blade.

Bud Havens, of the host club, was the victor in the tilt, which provided much merriment for spectators and contestants alike. He defeated Joe Gary, of Philadelphia, in the finals.

follows if he is a good golfer.

"Now, I don't believe we Americans will come over here for the championships for a few years. What's the good of coming over here if all we are going to do is beat one another. That doesn't do us any good. We could do that at home. I think the best thing would be to let the Britishers win their own championships for a few years, and then we can come over and try to beat them at it.

"YOU see you have only got a few old-timers who are wonderfully god golfers, but poor match-players, who often don't play really well in championships.

"There are very few young ones coming along who even play golf at home as well as the old-timers. I'd like to see some of them take off their shirts and get to work with kick and pep. The English people are too inclined to let themselves be consoled by the sportsman dope."

THERE are any number of causes contributing to the slicing of a ball from the tee, but among these I would list the three following as fairly outstanding ones:

1. Tight grip. Where the grip is tightened, the muscles generally take on a rigid condition. Quite naturally, this does not tend toward proper rhythm and timing.

2. Coverting the swing into a hit. Losing one's head and attempting to "kill the ball" is bad business where a slice is to be avoided.

3. Tense muscles. This has the same effect as putting a brake on the swing, deadening the ... brings the hands in ... club head, preventin... low through. This ... cause of a chronic ...

England Begins to Wonder

What Has Become of Titles

LONDON, June 26 (By A. P.).—The American victories on the golf links have revived in lively manner the discussions which have arisen from time to time ever since American sportsmen began to come to the old country and carry off sporting laurels over the question of whether sport should be amusement or science. Walter Hagen's remarks on the methods of British golfers only serve to put more pointedly what has been in the minds of most British sport lovers whenever they sorrowfully watched the national sports trophies crossing the Atlantic.

Miss Mary K. Browne, captain of the victorious American Wightman cup team, has said much the same thing, though not quite so robustly as Hagen, about British lawn tennis—that the British player thinks more of enjoying himself than winning the game.

It is too early yet for comment on Hagen's views, but the newspapers were already airing the subject before he spoke. The Evening Standard, for instance, asks whether, after all, the British method is not the best, and says that even if Miss Browne has made the right diagnosis, "possibly it would be better to continue being wrong in our own way, rather than start being right in America's way."

SUGGESTING that it is ironic to speak of such grimly efficient persons as Suzanne Lenglen and Vincent Richards as "players," the Standard says: "Let a man play with his heart and soul, but not give up the whole of his life to what should be no more than part of it. England will never be done so long as we play games in the spirit which is native to us—playing them because we enjoy them."

The Star, commenting on Bobby Jones' triumph, says that Americans have shone on the putting green where the Englishman is weakest.

"The difference," it adds, "is perhaps one of mentality. The Englishman is out in the main for sport and exercise, a desire which is more gratified by spectcular play in long shots than in patient attention to the less strenuous business of holing the ball."

The Star also makes reference to "the far greater material encouragement Americans players receive than English."

British golf writers are devoting unusual attention to Bobby Jones' prowess; his methods are minutely analyzed. Their word is that he is "just a genius."

The Sunday Observer's expert, commenting on the Americans' unquestioned superiority on the putting green, remarks: "One reason is that they cultivate a much fiercer outlook on golf than we do here; to them it is a life and death business."

Editorially the Observer says: "There can be no blinking of the fact that golf professionals as a body have been outclassed and the moral is one to be digested at leisure." As for Jones, he is beyond doubt the most proficient player ... in any country.

The Weekly Dispatch has collected some prominent views on this subject. Mlle. Lenglen laughed at the idea that she was a "martyr" to the game. Suzanne declared she had loved the game from a child, and that she followed the ordinary normal life, with no special diet, and enjoyed theaters, dancing and movies.

Miss Helen Wills, likewise, said there was no reason why a tennis player should live differently than other people. She had never found severe training necessary, and the only real hardship came from excessive demands on one's time.

Jean Borotra also complained of the great sacrifice of time, but asserted that he had made no other sacrifices. Both Borotra and Henri Cochet admitted that they do not smoke, but otherwise deprived themselves of no pleasures in life.

On the other hand, Jacques Brugnon declared he kept fit by smoking heavily and doing everything he ought not to do.

Mrs. L. A. Godfree (the former Kitty McKane), winner of many championships, said she followed no special diet, but, on the contrary, led the most normal life possible.

Perfect Scores Made By District Gunners

Four perfect scores of 25 out of 25 were turned in yesterday in the regular weekly shoot of the Washington Gun club. The scores were registered in the last two legs in the annual trophy event at handicap distances. Stine was the first to get into the select class, while Williams, Strowger and Morgan banged them perfectly in the second leg, Morgan winning in the shoot-off with 24.

Agee Wins 6-Mile Run In South Atlantic Meet

Baltimore, Md., June 26.—William Agee, Emorywood Athletic club track and field star, stepped into fame once more today in the annual South Atlantic track and field championship meet by winning the 6-mile run over a classy field of competitors.

The event, which was the feature one, attracted some of the best distance men in the city. Agee, after getting off to a good start, was never headed, and won in the fast time of 34 minutes and 2-5 seconds.

Frank Pierce, a teammate, was second, and Emil Hergenroder, running unattached, was third. The South Atlantic ... this year was attended with ... the largest entry lists in ...

KENILWORTH LISTS FIVE BOUTS

Ahearn and Babe Ruth Meet in Tuesday's Feature Bout.

DISTRICT ring fans are promised a fistic treat at the Kenilworth arena Tuesday night, when five bouts have been arranged by Matchmaker Heinie Miller. The feature, scheduled to go twelve rounds or less, will bring together Goldie Ahearn and Babe Ruth, flashy Philadelphia mauler.

That Ahearn, former A. E. F. featherweight champion and present holder of the Southern crown in this class, will meet a good man is indicated by the Quaker's record, which includes victories over such top-notchers as Mike Dundee, Red Chapman, Johnny Drew, Bobby Garcia and Joe Redman.

RUTH met his master last year in Honey Boy Finnegan, while Garcia has carried the Bostonian the limit on the three occasions he has faced him. This battle should be a hummer from start to finish.

Buster Dundee, of Baltimore, who has made a hit with local fans in previous fights here, will take on Eddie Buell, former Coast star, in the semifinal and this, too, should prove to be a real fight. Fourrounders between Billy West and Jack Cody, Joey Raymond (Baltimore) and Paul Bruen, and Kid Woody and Kid White will complete the card. The last-named pair are colored middleweights.

Women Will Play Town and Country

The monthly tournament of the District Women's Golf association will be held tomorrow on the course of the Town and Country club. Play will begin at 9:30 o'clock in the morning, and pairing will be made at the first tee.

Mount Rainier Ready For Center Contest

One of the best unlimited games will be staged today in the Mount Rainier ball yard, with the Jewish Community Center nine battling the Mount Rainier nine. Manager Holcer has strengthened his Rainier club considerably by the addition of "Winnie" Cornell, "Johnnie" Goetz, Dick Williams, and "Letty" McIntire. The Community Center, in addition to having several stellar performers of the local high schools, have acquired the services of "Ikey" Dreifuss, the hard-hitting outfielder. "Letty" Wildow will oppose Frank Corkinm, the Marylanders' sturdy right-hander, on the mound.

TRIP FOR HESS A. C.

The Hess A. C. nine journeys to Leonardtown, Md., today, where the team of that town is to be encountered. Dueterman and Smith will be on the mound for the travelers. All Hess players are asked to report to the home of Manager Dietrick, between 8 and 9 o'clock.

HERNDON SECOND.

The Herndon team moved into second place in the Loudoun County league yesterday by defeating the Leasburg Tossers, 20 to 0. Greear, on the mound for the winners, allowed but three hits.

19 COLLEGES ENTERED IN REGATTA

Navy and Washington Are Favorites in 4-Mile Feature.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., June 26 (By A. P.).—Nineteen crews, the greatest assembly of college oarsmen any regatta has ever seen, have come close to the end of their long siege of preparation for the races that will determine intercollegiate championships Monday evening along the Hudson. Eight varsity, six junior varsity and five freshman boatloads are assembled, fit and hopeful, for the three features of this spectacular eight-oared battle.

Overnight the center of rowing interest has shifted from the picturesque setting of Yale's varsity triumph over Harvard yesterday at New London to the rugged scene of this regatta of nation-wide interest and representation.

The climax of the training grind, tapering off today and tomorrow with light workouts designed to keep the oarsmen on edge, finds this historic rowing center seething with speculation, but also unanimous that the blue ribbon event of the regatta, the 4-mile varsity pull for the record array of eight shells, will find Washington and the Navy battling once more for supremacy.

The rivals of East and West, sturdy midshipmen and lean-limbed products of the Pacific Northwest, have monopolized honors for the past five years, the Navy scoring three and the Huskies two victories. On those occasions they have fought it out, with the Navy victorious twice. On Monday, unless all signs and portents go overboard, they will outclass the rest of the field and battle it out again between themselves, with each holding an even chance of triumph.

OF the six other varsity crews, opinion this evening found Wisconsin regarded as the real "dark horse," with a crew which has had no previous competition to test its caliber, but which has turned in several remarkable time trials. Pennsylvania likewise has its supporters, while Cornell may spring a surprise, but the chief battle among these eights is expected to be for third position. California, Syracuse and Columbia, the other entries, appear to have scant chance of being strong contenders.

The other crews have not been subjected to as much scrutiny as the varsities, but enough has come out of the training grind to establish Washington as a favorite in the junior varsity race with Pennsylvania as the huskies' main rival. Six shells are entered in this three-mile event with California joining the invasion against the Eastern "big four."

Another Western outfit, California's freshmen, shares with Columbia's yearlings the major backing for the third race of the regatta, a two-mile test which has five contenders. A day that alternately found the Hudson smooth and choppy hampered workouts, but nearly all of the crews managed to get in short practice spins today, while Pennsylvania and Wisconsin indulged in extended paddles up and down the course.

Navy's varsity eight had its first string line-up intact for the first time in several days with Born back in his seat at No. 7 after being out with stomach trouble. Broadbent, No. 2, who was laid up with a minor strain, seemed completely recovered.

THE Navy regulars had only a light drill, but four of their substitutes—Stuckey, Freeman, Lindell and Brewer—got together in a four-oared shell and administered a sound beating to four Pennsylvania substitutes in an informal race over the last mile of the varsity course.

The midshipment outclassed their rivals and won by something like a dozen lengths in 6 minutes 27 seconds, with Pennsylvania's four nearly swamped by the rising swells and forced to quit near the finish.

This contest was scheduled as one of two formal races among substitutes, but the rough condition of the river forced cancellation of an eight-oared event in which Columbia and Cornell boatloads were to have raced a combination of California, Washington and Wisconsin substitutes.

The entries for each of the three races in the order in which they have drawn positions follows:

GOOD GAME PROMISED.

PLAYGROUND TENNIS.

Each of the Washington playgrounds is preparing for its annual tennis tournament to be held in July and to be followed by the annual interplayground doubles tourney, which will take place early in August.

The playground matches are to be run off as singles and the winner and runner-up will pair as a doubles team to represent their home ground in the city-wide affair. Clara Alderton and Mildred Vogel, of Iowa avenue grounds, the 1925 city champions, will defend their title.

All of the 65 play centers are now functioning under directors according to Miss Maude Parker and most of them will foster tennis tourneys.

In addition to the regular grounds which have been open for some months, three grounds, Takoma, at Fifth and Van Buren streets; the John Burroughs at Eighteenth and Monroe streets; and the Greenfield in Anacostia were opened last week.

The school playgrounds which are now open are: White—Adams, Arthur, Bowen, Brightwood Park, Brookland, Buchanan, Congress Heights, Cooke, Corcoran, Dennison, John Eaton, Emery, Fairbrother, Filmore, Hayes, Jefferson, Johnson-Powell, Ketcham, Ludlow, Orr, Polk-Henry, Tenley, Wallach-Towers, Wakeman, Wheatley, Van Ness. Colored — Briggs, Bruce, Burrville, Cleveland, Deanwood, Giddings, Lovejoy, MacGrudder, Slater-Langston, and Dunbar.

Hike Today.

An afternoon hike, swimming party, and moonlight supper party at the Red Triangle Outing club on the Potomac are on the program for today. Hikers will meet at District line and Wisconsin avenue at 3 p. m. The meeting place may be reached by taking any car on Wisconsin avenue or a Somerset car from down town.

Director Resigns.

A swimming party at the Georgetown pool at 1:30 p. m. Tuesday for the Happy Hollow girls has been planned by Mrs. Ella Foulois, the director, as a final affair before her resignation goes into effect June 30.

Mrs. Foulois' resignation was a result of ill health and was accepted with regret by Mrs. Susie Root Rhodes, municipal director, and Miss Maude Parker, director of girls activities. Miss Parker paid Mrs. Foulois high tribute in stating that during the two years in which she had been director at Happy Hollow she had been untiring in her efforts and had encouraged the girls of the neighborhood in all sports. The activities which Mrs. Foulois has built up during her directorship include basketball, tennis, quoits, newcomb, dodgeball, slagball and track. Happy Hollow teams have been outstanding in all of these, Miss Parker stated.

District Net Tournament.

July 3 has been set as the opening date for play in the District women's championship tennis tournament but the committee is still at sea regarding the courts which are to be used for the matches.

Negotiations are pending for use of the Columbia Country club courts, but no definite answer had been received by the committee at a late hour last night.

Today's Games.
New Haven vs. Hobo, North Ellipse, 4 o'clock; Apollo vs. Southerns, No. 4, 4 o'clock; Auth's vs. Celtics, West Ellipse, 1 o'clock.

IN contrast to the march that the Auth's team took through the senior ranks of the Capital City Baseball league, which culminated in their winning the championship last Sunday, the races of the juniors and midgets, which will be furthered with seven games today, promise to be battles to the "bitter end."

The seniors will finish their schedule today with the usual pair of games booked on the Plaza playground diamond, where the clubs have drawn some of the largest sandlot crowds of the season. The Auth's stack their clean record for the series against the Trem-tes, who would like nothing better than a victory, and have pre-empted the same. Brookland and the Cardinals will battle to keep out of the cellar.

NO section has generated the heated struggles which have marked play in Section A of the junior class. Three tie games have been recorded in that league and three games have been won by one-run margins.

In order that future games deadlocked will not be called to allow other teams to use the field, the secretary has arranged all games of that league for 3 o'clock so that the clubs may battle to a decision

The Corinthians, topping the section with three victories, face the Takoma Tigers for the second time. The Corinthians will be in a good position to annex the title by a victory, while the Tigers must win to stay in the race. The Corinthians won the first game, 6 to 2.

Probably no other game presents a setting of natural rivalry to equal that of the clash of the Smithfields and Congressionals. These teams split in a two-game series before the Capital City series started and then tied their only official game. The beaten team will face tough sledding to remain in line for the title.

THE Independents, twice beaten, hope to compensate for those losses with a victory over the Freeers, leaders in Section B of the junior class. The Freers now have four triumphs to no defeats.

In the other game of that section, the Aztecs seek their initial victory from the Southerns. The Aztecs have a number of notable wins to their credit in independent games and may be the dark horse of the race.

The string of four victories ran up by the Auth's nine, in the midget department, comes in for the acid test against the Celtics, who have won their last two games and have been awaiting their crack at the leaders.

The New Havens, in second place, hope to shake the jinx which has lately followed their club. They meet the Hobo team. In the other game, the Southerns seek a .500 percentage at the expense of the Apollo team.

LD MASTER MAN OF HABIT

Johnson Uses Style as of is Youth.

(By the Associated Press.)

IN his twentieth year as a Washington moundsman, Walter Johnson still pitches with little apparent effort and is regarded by many fans as the most graceful hurler in the big leagues.

The veteran's style of windup and delivery has not changed since he began his career. But passing years have taken their toll from his great speed and endurance.

There was a time when his fast ball shot by the plate at such a clip catchers barely could hold it. Old timers tell the story of how Johnson once pitched three games in as many days, winning each by a shutout.

Sport writers repeatedly have buried him, especially in 1920, 1921, 1922, and 1923, when he suffered a reversal in form. But the "Old Master" came back in 1924 to win 23 games to 7 defeats, only again to read his retirement was near when he lost two out of his three games in the world series.

Last year Johnson won 20 and lost 7 games. This year finds him doing mound duty in good form.

JOHNSON warms up slowly and easily. The first ten or fifteen minutes he stands about 10 feet within the regulation distance between the box and plate. Then he steps back and begins shooting them across more in earnest.

In the box, there is nothing fanciful about his delivery. His right arm makes a circle swing, the ball touching the glove high over his head, then it shoots downward and far to the back, coming around in a full, quick sweep at the waist as the wrist snaps out the ball.

As the swing is starting backward, the "Big Train" lifts his left foot slightly and his body sways a little in the same direction and then comes forward with the sweep. One scarcely has time to realize the ball has left his hand before it reaches the plate.

A quick glance at the runners, his arms give a jerk upward and come down to the waist, where the ball momentarily is hidden in the glove. Then begins the swing far to the back before sweeping to the front.

Johnson always has been noted for his coolness under fire and those who have followed him say he is even more so now. He watches the fielders carefully and when in a particularly tight place sometimes stops to motion a player to another position. His only indication of tension is patting and scraping the mound with his feet.

Shamrocks to Face Addison A. C. Today

The Shamrocks and Addison will occupy the Georgetown Hollow field this afternoon in the absence of the Knickerbockers, who are playing in Eastport, Md. The Harps have lost but one game, that to the Dreadnaughts. Addison can break into the elite circles with a triumph.

The game starts at 3 o'clock.

TAKOMA MEETS LIBERTY.

The Takoma Park baseball team will meet the Liberty A. C. nine today at 3 o'clock on the Silver Spring field.

COMMERCIAL LOOP RACE TIGHTENS

"Yodey" Murray Topped Batters in First Half Series.

WITH the first week of the Commercial league's second series completed there is every evidence that it will provide even harder-fought baseball than the first race which Fashion Shop won in the final game from Chevy Chase Dairy.

Pepco, unable to win a single game in the first series, is off to a good start with two victories to its credit. True one game came by forfeit from the Fashion Shop. In the other, however, the Electrics trounced the Union Printers, which is evidence of real strength. Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., another club out of the first race, has won one game and lost one during the week.

RUMORS have it that all is not well in the ranks of Fashion Shop and that the winners of the first series have been "shot." Chevy Chase Dairy stopped the Clothiers in the opening game after a terrific battle.

"Yodey" Murray, former Garfield outfielder and now a member of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. nine, led the individual batters in the first series with an average of .640 with Haas, of Chevy Chase Dairy, who plays on Sunday with the Shamrocks, second with an average of .531. "Dick" Williams, of Fashion Shop, annexed third honors with .502.

The Commercial league has been drawing the largest crowds of the sandlot season and operates daily except Saturday and Sunday on the West Ellipse diamond.

Marlboro Nine Plays Wesley Tossers Today

Marlboro will entertain the Wesley A. C. nine today in a battle booked to get under way at 3 o'clock. "Hughey" Ryan is slated to do the hurling for the Marylanders with Moreland behind the bat.

SOUTHERN JRS. WIN.

The Southern Juniors nosed out the National Circles yesterday, 6 to 5, on the Washington barracks diamond. The hitting of Tonker and Taylor featured for the winners. Both smacked triples.

GOVERNMENT LEAGUE LED BY VET

Carroll Topped First Series Hitters With .457 Average.

"EDDIE" CARROLL, manager of General Accounting Office, who has probably as much sandlot baseball as any player now active, gave the youngsters in the Government league's first series a mark to shoot at when he hung up an average of .457 for ten games.

Richards, of Interstate, proved a smart batter with .611, put participated in only six games.

Smith, also of General Accounting Office, made the most hits, 21, while Schneider, Gartland and Homan, all of Government Printing Office, were tied for run-making honors with sixteen each.

Wesley McDonald, General Accounting Office, and "Brick" Newman, Government Printing Office, were deadlocked for pitching honors, with three victories and no defeats each.

General Accounting Office won the championship of the first series last week, taking two of the three games from Government Printing Office after those team had tied during the regular season.

PLAYERS TO BE SEEDED IN U. S. AMATEUR GOLF MEET

Oakmont Plan Abandoned By Body

First Two Rounds of Match Play to Be at 18 Holes.

Changes by U. S. G. A. Are Most Radical in Years.

HENRY LITCHFIELD WEST.

THE conditions under which the national amateur golf championship will be played at Baltusrol on September 13-18, inclusive, as officially announced yesterday by the United States Golf association, are a radical departure from the system governing similar events during previous years. This is unquestionably due to the fact that the plan followed last year at Oakmont was so unsatisfactory that it had to be abandoned.

In the first place, the association has introduced match play at eighteen holes for the first and second rounds, which will be played on the morning and afternoon of Wednesday, September 15, with the third round, the semifinals and the final going the full route of 36 holes. This arrangement allows 32 players to qualify and Monday and Tuesday will be devoted to qualifying the field, eighteen holes to be played each day.

THE second novelty is the seeding of the draw. "In drawing for match play rounds," the circular announces, "the draw will be seeded from a ranking list to be prepared by the committee, ranking the leading 20 players. The first eight names on such ranking list will be seeded in the draw."

The names of the players drawn by lot, frequently in unbalanced upper and rackets, so that contestants ight reasonably be expected ach the semifinal or even the rounds have been compelled to nate each other in the earlier sts.

tries will be received from players who qualified for the match-play rounds of ateur championship in any of the past ears. Any other amateur golfer, who is a member club of the United States sociation and has a handicap rating 5 or less, based on the Calkins handicap system, may submit his entry, together with a statement of his competitive record for the past two years, to the championship committee on or before August 10, 1926. The ds of all such entrants will be investigated and the player notified as to his acceptance or refusal at least two weeks prior to the championship. Positively no entry will be so considered which is not in the hands of the championship committee on or before the above-mentioned date."

Under the above conditions at least two Washington golfers are able to play in the qualification and by merely submitting their fees. C. J. Dunphy qualified at Pinehurst in 1924 and Roland Mackenzie not only qualified both at Merion and Oakmont, but was the medalist in the latter event.

It is certain that a number of other District players will make an effort to secure the coveted places in the eligible list. Miller B. Stevenson, who played at Oakmont last year, but failed to qualify, will seek another opportunity at Baltusrol, and his record will include his runner-up position in the Middle Atlantic championship.

ALTHOUGH the association declined to accept R. Cliff McKimmie as an entrant after he had won the Middle Atlantic championship years ago, it is confidently believed that George J. Voigt, who recently won that title, will receive favorable consideration.

Voigt won the District amateur championship last year and has been winner or runner-up in every local tournament this year in which he has entered except the Columbia event. He is admittedly one of the best golfers in the District and being a fine medal score player should have no difficulty in qualifying at Baltusrol. His application is certain to be heartily indorsed by representative golfers of the District.

GERMAN STEEL BONDS SOON OVERSUBSCRIBED

SKELLY 6½S ARE STRONG

New York, June 26 (By the Associated Press.)—A strong investment demand for the $30,000,000 United Steel Works of Germany loan, resulting in its prompt oversubscription, today contrasted with ebbing interest in the bond market. Prices of listed obligations fluctuated unevenly in a dull two-hour trading session.

Due to the accumulation of large advance orders for the German steel issue, subscription books were closed within 15 minutes with many applications still unfilled. The bonds were priced at 96 to yield 6.83 per cent, and a wide public distribution was reported. Outstanding German bonds were strengthened by the success of the offering, General Electric 6½s going to a new high at 108, while the government 7s and the Rheinelbe Union 7s hovered just below the year's high levels.

The character of trading in the domestic list was little changed from that of preceding sessions. Chesapeake & Ohio convertible 5s, Louisville & Nashville 5s and Rutland 4½s advanced 1 to 2½ points in light trading and a single transaction in Worcester, Connecticut & Eastern 4½s, normally inactive, took place at 86, an advance of almost 10 points over the last previous sale.

Skelly Oil 6½s were the only important feature of the industrial division, moving up 1½ points to 146½, within a fraction of the year's top price.

CURB MARKET REVIEW.

New York, June 26 (By the Associated Press).—Trading on the curb exchange today was rather brisk for a half-holiday session at this season. The demand was insufficient in volume to instill a firm tone in the several groups, but no effort was made to extend the trading beyond the area prevailing during the past week. General Baking and Goodyear Tire registered early gains of good-sized fractions.

Ford Motor of Canada recorded the widest movement, selling up 10 points to 495, and Stutz made a fractional gain to 25¼.

Public utility issued remained quiet with only a few stocks making any progress toward new levels. Engineers Public Service sold from 22 to 22¾, and Electric Investors scored a moderate advance, selling to 41½, but later reacting. Oil shares moved narrowly on restricted trading.

During the greater part of the week many of the leading groups were in demand on a large scale, and a number of stocks made vigorous advances. Interest increased in the last two days when a receding tendency developed. Bonds were traded on an unusually large scale, a long list of issues changing hands with sales ranging above the two-million-dollar mark on all the full business days. Many bond issues moved over a wide range chiefly to higher levels. Foreign bonds moved up 1 to 3 points, a number of the German bonds being especially active.

Increased activity in the oil stocks was an important feature of the week's trading. Standard Oil of New York, in which the transactions were on a large scale in the odd lots and the new stock, moved up from 32 to 34¼. Continental Oil was in special demand because of the beginning of the shipments at the rate of 5,000 barrels a day on the Humble Oil contract from the Rattlesnake field.

A feature of the industrial group was an advance of over 2 points in Gillette Safety Razor to 100¾. De Forest Radio was without support, but later rallied to $1. Freshman Radio had a decline of over 2 points. Motor stocks were generally heavy.

Utility issues showed strength in the first few days, but later some of these issues developed a dragging tendency.

BRAN—21.00.

CHICAGO GRAIN.

Chicago, June 26 (By the Associated Press).—Grain elevators in the Southwest, reported already overflowing and still larger arrivals there looked for on Monday, gave a downward slant to wheat values today. Increase of selling pressure from the new harvest left the July delivery of wheat at only about 1 cent premium over September as compared with 4 cents the day previous. The wheat market as a whole closed irregular, 1½c net lower to ¾c advance, corn unchanged to ½c higher, oats ⅜ to ⅝@¾c off, and provisions varying from 20c declines to an equal gain.

With primary receipts today more than double those of a week ago, the wheat market soon began to give way after an early turn. The immediate weakening factor was announcement of liberal sales of wheat at Kansas City to be sent to Chicago as a measure of relief for storage room at Kansas City. Special notice was taken of word that Wichita, Kans., had received today 461 carloads of wheat, the biggest single day's total on record for that market, and that 750 carloads were expected at Wichita Monday. Hutchinson and other harvest centers in Kansas were likewise reporting receipts of unusual magnitude.

Advices telling of rains causing delay to threshing as well as damage to the quality of wheat had but little lasting effect toward lifting values in view of indications of yields both in Kansas and Oklahoma way above recent estimates. Relative firmness of liverpool quotations appeared also to be virtually ignored, export demand today for North American wheat being comparatively slow, despite a forecast of smaller world shipments.

Cool wheater tended somewhat to rally the corn market. Oats lacked support, and fell to the lowest level yet this season.

Provisions reflected the weakness of grain.

Parent-Teacher Activities

All notices for this column must be in the hands of the chairmen by noon on the Wednesday preceding the Sunday on which publication is desired. Address Mrs. J. N. Saunders, 3618 Porter street northwest.

There was a special meeting of the executive board of the District of Columbia Congress of Parent-Teacher Associations on Tuesday afternoon in the Women's City club, when many questions of importance were discussed. The board authorized Mrs. William Collins, the headquarters chairman, to confer with the officers of the national association regarding the establishment of a parent-teacher building in this city.

The chairman of education, Mrs. E. R. Kalmbach, was instructed to confer with the board of education about having visiting teachers in the District of Columbia. The board authorized the president to appoint a special committee to go over the National Capital parks and playgrounds commission bill looking toward provision for and maintenance of adequate playgrounds in the District of Columbia. It was decided to hold an all-day parent-teacher institute on the third Tuesday in October, which will be the date of the first meeting of the organization, at which one of the field secretaries of the national congress of parents and teachers will be the director. There will be a publicity conference early in October at which there will be a class in publicity for the chairmen of the school organizations.

Mrs. Giles Scott Rafter, the president of the District of Columbia congress, entertained the ten new members of the executive board at luncheon on Tuesday before the meeting of the board.

The summer round-up for preschool children has the indorsement of the superintendent of schools and the cooperation of the health department. The work of examining the children who will enter the schools for the first time in September is being started all over the city. Mrs. C. H. Knight, from the Bradley school, and Mrs. Suzanne Rauscher, from the John Eaton, have entered into this work with great zeal and are keeping a record of the children who will enter those two schools in the fall. It is most important for the parents to realize that every child who enters on his or her school career with a physical defect which could be corrected will be seriously delayed in obtaining his or her education. The law requires each child who enters school to be vaccinated for smallpox and it would take very little time for the doctor to examine the child at the same time so that any defect could be corrected before September. A child with a strong body can study and learn much better than one who is suffering with some physical defect.

The proposed lengthening of the school day was given earnest consideration by an overflowing meeting of the Johnson association on Monday. The association was unanimously against lengthening the school day or week and objected to doing away with home work.

The Pierce-Webb association held the last meeting recently in the Pierce school. The trip to Mount Vernon was won by the kindergarten of the Webb school. The luncheon which was held on June 10 was a success. With part of the proceeds the association, following its usual custom, will defray the expense of ribbons and engraving the diplomas for the graduating class.

A special meeting of the Bancroft association was held on Monday afternoon and was largely attended. It was called to consider a questionnaire submitted by the board of education concerning the lengthening of school hours and dispensing with home study. It was unanimously voted not to favor lengthening of the school day, not to favor school on Saturday morning and not to favor dispensing with all home work.

The last regular meeting for the school year of the John Burroughs association was held in the school on June 17. The meeting was well attended, 135 being present. After hearing the reports of committees, the election of officers was held, the following being elected: President, Mrs. Arthur H. Fast; first vice president, Mrs. Ovit; second vice president, Miss Mary Draney; third vice president, Mrs. Pleager; secretary, Mrs. Snell; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Lutton; treasurer, Mrs. Sherwood.

The inquiry on lengthening the school day in order to decrease or abolish home study, submitted by the board of education, was considered by the association. After some discussion it was moved and carried unanimously that it was the sense of the association that none of the proposals submitted should be adopted but that the present status in the schools should be maintained.

The association voted to provide money for two rose arches to be placed at the entrance of the flower garden on the school grounds. Money was aslo voted for the visual educational picture shown June 11 and for refreshments for those who are graduating from the eighth grade.

The June meeting of the Brightwood association was held at the school on the evening of June 1. The 8B grade, or graduating class, was the special guests of the evening and the program for the evening arranged for its benefit. Dr. E. G. Kimball gave an informal address to the boys and girls, particularly pointing out the advantages of the various kinds of high schools the city offers. Dr. J. T. Herson, of Hamline M. E. church, gave a talk relative to the advantages of the public school system as existing in America today.

From a personal knowledge of same, Dr. Herson drew a comparison between the schools of various European countries and the schools of America, pointing out the truly educational advantages this offers, free of cost to the boys and girls through public schools. Vocal solos were rendered by Mrs. T. H. Mullenberg, and piano solos by Miss White. The graduating class sang "America the Beautiful." Mrs. J. M. Hall presided.

The Truesdell association held its last meeting of the school year Monday afternoon. Mrs. Mullenberg presided. After a brief discussion 90 out of 92 persons present opposed the lengthening of the school day and by separate action placed themselves on record in favor of some home work for the pupils.

The chairman of the luncheon committee, Mrs. Shankle, reported that the luncheon was a success and that the school realized $177.89 therefrom. The need of a community playground was again emphasized.

The June meeting celebrated the tenth anniversary of the association. The president, Mrs. Mullenberg, and the school principal, Miss Dilgar, were presented with beaded bags. The three former presidents, Mrs. Metcalf, Mrs. Parsons, and Mrs. Flanagan, were presented with silver sandwich trays.

The officers for next year are: President, Mrs. Berry; vice president, Miss Dilger; secretary, Mrs. Wiemer; treasurer, Mrs. Powers; executive board, Mrs. Mullenberg, Mrs. Williams, Mrs. Peterson, Mrs. Griffith, and Mrs. Shankle.

COMMUNITY CENTERS

The community center department, Mrs. L. W. Hardy, acting director, announces the opening of the summer season Thursday with a full schedule of activities centering at Central High and Dunbar High, including swimming, tennis, track and gymnasium, other athletic sports and with band concerts and community singing at intervals throughout the summer.

At Central High the swimming pool will open for the first time on July 6, with sessions for children up to 14 years of age every Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday afternoon until August 31. Three periods will be offered each afternoon, 1:30 to 2:10, 2:10 to 2:50, 2:50 to 3:30 p. m.

The pool at Central High will likewise be open every Tuesday, Thursday and Friday evening, beginning July 6, with two periods each evening for girls of 15 years and over, and one period each evening for boys of 15 years and over. The girls' sessions will be from 7:30 to 8:30, and from 8:30 to 9:30 p. m., and the boys' and men's sessions from 9:30 to 10:30 p. m.

The tennis courts at Central will be open every afternoon from 5 o'clock until dark, Saturdays from 1 o'clock until dark. Paul E. Blocher is supervisor of the courts, and groups desiring to use the courts at regular times are asked to get in touch with him at 6308 West Clifton Terrace. The track and gymnasium will be used by athletic groups on Tuesday, Thursday and Friday evenings. Band concerts are being planned by the community center department in connection with the summer schedule at Central High, two in July and two in August, to be announced later.

The staff in charge of activities at Central High includes Mrs. Edith H. Hunter, secretary Central High center; assisted by Mrs. Ida E. Kebler, secretary Columbia Heights center; Mrs. A. C. Driscoll, secretary Thomson center, and Mrs. M. W. Davis, secretary Southeast center. Dr. G. H. White is supervisor of swimming activities; Miss Martha Ward, Lee J. Kriz and Gordon B. Rath are life guards; Mrs. E. Scott and Mrs. L. Wynne are in charge of showers.

Dunbar High center will open Thursday, and an interesting program has been formulated by Mrs. Gabrielle Pelham, general secretary community center department, and Leon Perry, assistant superintendent of schools, in charge of special activities. The center will be open each day in July and August, and school groups are invited to register for regular hours for track, baseball, and other athletic sports. There will be radio service for baseball news for the community, and many attractions.

The schedule will be as follows: Monday, regular activities, baseball, track, practice, quoits, tennis, croquet, childrens games and story telling and community singing. Special activity: Community singing from front steps of Dunbar.

Tuesday and Wednesday, regular activities as on Monday. Thursday, in addition to regular schedule, there will be from 7:30 to 9 p. m. Simon commandery practice team in the armory, and Elks drill corps. Friday, in addition to regular schedule, the special activity will be swimming from 3 to 6:45 p. m. in periods of 45 minutes, each for girls, women, boys and men respectively.

Each Friday will be special program day for children, beginning with July 3, when the children, headed by the Montgomery fife and drum corps, will present an exercise, "Why I Love the Flag," on the front steps of Dunbar High. The corps of assistants for the summer includes experienced directors in every line of work scheduled.

FARM RELIEF AND POLITICS.

If those senators who supported the Haugen bill are anxious to help agriculture, they can do so by supporting the bill to promote cooperation among the farmers which President Coolidge has recommended. There is a strong majority in Congress against the Haugen subsidy plan. There is probably a majority in favor of promoting cooperation. The farmers can get something tangible and valuable if their friends in Congress will put aside politics and support the Fess amendment to the cooperative marketing bill.

When the farmers of the West learn what is going on in Congress, they will have a better idea of the identity of their real friends. "Farm relief" has been used for political purposes by both Republicans and Democrats, without any regard whatever for the farmer. The Presidency and control of Congress is what is aimed at; not farm relief. Some Republican and all Democratic senators are quite willing to see President Coolidge become unpopular among the farmers. The Republicans in question entertain the hope that perhaps Mr. Coolidge may be "unavailable" by 1928. The Democratic senators hope to throw the Republican party out of the White House and Congress. A coalition of these elements is at work, but it will not last long. Republicans will not join Democrats in attacking the protective tariff. Democrats will not go very far to promote plans which merely aim to substitute another Republican President for Mr. Coolidge.

The Republican party is committed to the protective tariff. If Republican aspirants for the Presidency wish to commit political suicide, they will join Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, in an attack upon the tariff.

Senator Robinson is evidently in earnest in believing that the Democratic party should attack the present tariff law. He and Senator Reed, of Missouri, and other party leaders may have concluded that the tariff will be a better issue than antiprohibition. They have not yet shown, however, that the farmer would be benefited by opening up the American market to foreign farm products. Mr. Robinson proposes to reduce the tariff on commodities which the farmer purchases; but if he has any regard at all for the consumer he will also propose that the duties be lowered on all food products. Now that some of the spokesmen of the farmers announce that a tariff fight is on, will Mr. Robinson go the whole distance and demand a slashing reduction of duties on farm products as well as upon articles consumed by farmers?

These are political questions. They will be answered during the campaign. In the meantime the Senate can help the farmers if it really wishes to do so, by giving them $100,000,000 with which to facilitate cooperative marketing.

CODIFICATION OF THE LAWS.

After 30 years of persistent effort on the part of members interested in simplifying the laws the Senate has at last agreed to the bill for the codification of the statutes. But the Senate could not allow such an important measure to pass without amendment. Therefore the bill which substitutes one volume of some 1,700 pages for 25 ponderous tomes had to show that some one in the Senate had something to do with its preparation.

Fortunately Representative Fitzgerald, who had charge of the legislation in the House, is quite willing to accept the amendments which the Senate incorporated. It will not be necessary to send the bill to conference, as the Senate amendments will be accepted and the bill will go to the President within a few days.

Nor is it likely that Mr. Coolidge will scrutinize the engrossed copy very carefully, to do so would require him to devote several days to the reading, and as there is absolutely no new legislation in the entire 1,700 pages such a scrutiny would be a waste of time.

The statutes were last revised in 1877. Since that time Congress has been industrious and has produced more than a score of volumes filled with laws. So many new provisions exist that no one man, however erudite he might be, could possibly follow them all. The House committee on revision of the laws has worked hard for years in an effort to codify and simplify them.

The legal fraternity as well as all who have occasion to consult the laws will experience a feeling of relief when the President announces his approval of the bill, and every law student who is facing the necessity of buying a "law library" will thank Mr. Fitzgerald and his associates for their great work of codification.

THE SUBMARINE WINS.

The unlimited construction of submarines is insured by the action of the naval subcommittee of the Geneva disarmament conference in voting down the American proposal to limit naval armaments on the basis of total tonnage by classes of ships. By applying a limitation upon the tonnage of each class of ships, the nations would have been compelled to take the next step—the limitation of submarines.

With due respect for the patriotism and intelligence of the American naval experts in the conference, we believe that public opinion in the United States will support the action of the majority of the subcommittee in rejecting the American proposal.

The United States is not in a position to agree to the limitation of submarines. Its outlying possessions, including the Panama canal, can not be properly defended except with submarines.

The proposal to abolish submarines is of British and not American origin. Apparently the British delegates to the Geneva conference preferred that Americans should advance the proposal which has just been rejected. The nations supporting it were Great Britain, Japan, Argentina, Chile and Spain. The nations opposing it were France, Italy, Belgium, Holland, Sweden, Poland, Finland, Roumania, Jugoslavia, Czechoslovakia and Bulgaria.

France and Italy might as well abandon their African possessions as to abandon the right to build all the submarines they deem necessary for their national defense. The other countries which retain the right to build submarine defense fleets are dependent upon this class of naval defense for their security. They have no battle fleets to guard their coasts. Some of them have extensive colonies. Their merchant fleets are comparatively small. They can well afford to face the risks attending the operation of their merchantmen against submarines rather than lose the right to protect their coasts by submarines. Great Britain, on the other hand, has a mighty battle fleet and the largest merchant marine in the world. Submarines are the most dangerous enemy that the British merchant marine would have to encounter, and against them the British battle fleet is comparatively ineffective.

The question before the United States experts was whether protection of the American merchant marine against submarines was not more important than the submarine defense of American possessions. That question seems to have been answered by them in favor of the merchant marine. The American experts did not give enough weight, in our opinion, to the necessity of making the Panama canal and Hawaii impregnable to naval attack. The merchant marine can be guarded against submarine attack by the escort system, as was proved in the late war; but nobody has yet discovered a substitute for submarine defense of the canal and Hawaii.

Incidentally, the decision of the majority at Geneva manifests the fixed determination of nations possessing minor sea power to protect themselves to the best of their ability, notwithstanding the general desire to reduce the cost of armaments. It was not to be expected that they would consent to abandon their most effective weapon at the behest of the strong sea powers.

WOMEN AND THE HOUSE OF LORDS.

An anomaly in the make-up of the British parliament, as at present constituted, admittedly exists. While women are eligible as members of the house of commons, the house of lords is reserved exclusively for men. At first sight, there might seem to be but little hardship in this arrangement, as the hereditary peers, who, by succession in England and Wales or by election in Scotland and Ireland, form the membership of the house of lords, are mostly men. There are, however, some thirty women who are peeresses in their own right, either by creation or as inheritors of baronies which descend to heirs general. Some of these are ambitious of taking their own part in the legislative councils of the British nation, and they not unnaturally hold that the house of lords would be the proper sphere of their activities. Lady Rhondda heads the movement for the seating of those peeresses, and she has been very energetic, but, so far, unsuccessful, in pressing their claims, and books of reference discreetly inform us that their status as sitting and voting members of the house of lords is still unsettled. This statement of the case is somewhat in error. It is at present decided that they are inadmissible to the rights and privileges of the upper chamber; it is only because the agitation to remove this restriction is continuous that the matter may, in a certain sense, be said to be "unsettled."

The whole question goes very far back in the history of the British constitution. In his magisterial and, to a very large extent, definitive "Constitutional History of England," Stubbs asserts that, in the Middle Ages, there are instances of countesses, baronesses, and abbesses being summoned to send proxies to council, or to furnish their military service, but not to attend parliament as peeresses. Whether these ladies considered that they were suffering from disabilities there is nothing to show, but, even if they did, the standing of women in the body politic was then so low, and their ranks were so unorganized, that they had little opportunity to air grievances or discuss either abstract or concrete rights.

With the modern advance of women as to a large degree copartners with men in governmental affairs, a great change in this respect has been brought about. Every year a bill to enable peeresses in their own right to sit and vote in the house of lords is introduced and debated in the august chamber itself. Every year, up to and including the present one, it has been defeated. Its promoters, however, remembering the many disappointments that attended the deceased wife's sister bill and the wearily lengthened period that was required to pass that beneficent measure into law, take new heart of grace after each adverse vote, and proceed to lay fresh plans, confident in the belief that in the long run they will carry their point. Viscount Astor, who moved the adoption of the peeresses bill on Thursday last, and the Duke of Atholl, who seconded it, were, respectively, derided unmercifully and ungallantly for being under the thumbs of their distinguished wives, but they shook the banter off with great nonchalance and, in the result, had the satisfaction of seeing 80 of their fellow members vote in favor of their motion. The division lists showed 125 against and 80 for the bill. This comparatively small majority proves that the peeresses' claim is by no means a lost cause.

There can be no doubt that the admission of a few brainy women would add spice to the proceedings of the house of lords and tend to give intelligence to its decisions. Their presence would go far to remove the oracular reproach, erstwhile voiced by a famous wit, that "the house of lords does nothing in particular and does it very well."

"CATCH THEM YOUNG."

Two great facts are emerging from the study of crime in the United States. One is that the prison system manufactures criminals. The other is that criminals as a rule are made and not born.

There are twenty times as many criminals outside of prison as there are inside. The criminals outside can not hope to perfect their criminal education inside of prisons, because these institutions are overcrowded already. The mass production of crime, on which the prisons are engaged, is evidently not adequate to the enormous demand. Would-be criminals are forced to develop their talents as best they can, without taking post graduate courses in prison.

The percentage of individuals who are born criminals is very small indeed. Environment plays a greater role than heredity, even in families that are supposed to have criminal tendencies.

Society is trying to deal with criminals after they have been developed. Its plan is to place them in prisons which are so conducted as to be finishing schools for crime. The theory of imprisonment is that criminals will be punished, and that this punishment will cause them to quit their criminal ways. Yet, when they are discharged, they are still regarded as criminals and pariahs. No one will trust them or give them a helping hand. Once a convict, always a criminal, is the enlightened rule by which society deals with crime. The existing "system" might be summed up like this: Society neglects the young, and encourages conditions which develop criminals; then it insists that aspiring criminals shall be placed in institutions which will stamp them forever as criminals and teach them the art of crime; then, if after graduation they are not sufficiently expert to commit crime without apprehension, they are sent back to prison to elaborate their criminal education. In no event are they permitted to be anything but criminals.

Is it not high time that society should reform its system? Is a nation truly "civilized" when it retains a system that makes crime?

The experience of educators who have installed the simple "school republic" system proves that children can be turned away from crime as easily as they can be turned toward it. By making school children citizens of a democratic school republic, modeled exactly upon the Constitution of the United States, it has been found that the children exert an all-powerful influence for good upon one another. They are natural office seekers, inherently anxious to obtain the approval and admiration of their associates. They crave responsibility. They take to the idea of equal rights and equal duties. This plan, installed in the schools of Cuba by Gen. Leonard Wood, was the prime factor in the rapid sanitation of the island. The children took into their homes the ideas they imbibed at school—ideas of honor, cleanliness, good morals and good manners. Parents learned from their children, and homes were transformed from disease hovels into abodes of cleanliness.

A school room, organized as a city, has a mayor, a board of health, a few policemen and other officers, elected by the children from among their own number. These officers do their duty with wonderful efficiency, and all the private citizens take pride in seeing that their city officials do their duty. The fundamentals of citizenship are learned, and in fact school children under this system exercise American citizenship more vigilantly than their elders. There is less neglect of the duties of citizenship. Violations of the city republic's law, enacted by the children, are promptly corrected. Vicious habits leading to crime are extirpated, and wayward children are induced to become law-abiding.

If the American home is to disappear as a nursery of virtue, why should not the school citizenship plan be adopted as a means of training children before criminal habits have taken root? "Catch them young" is a good rule, whether the object be the training of criminals or good citizens.

Is It Real, Brother—or Only a Mirage?

WORLD LAW.

The House committee on foreign affairs has favorably reported the Tinkham resolution requesting the President to call a third conference at The Hague for the codification of international law. The committee's report makes public a letter from Secretary Kellogg, dated May 11, 1926, addressed to Chairman Porter of the committee, in which Mr. Kellogg discloses that the Netherlands government last year informally sounded the United States government as to its attitude toward a third conference at The Hague for the purpose of codifying international law.

Mr. Kellogg advised the Netherlands Minister that the United States would give its hearty approval of and cooperation in a third peace conference to be called by the Netherlands government, under three conditions: First, that all interested states, whether members of the league of nations or not, should have the freest opportunity to participate and to discuss all projects, whether brought forward by the committee of the league of nations or otherwise; second, that full account should be taken of the preliminary work of jurists in the western hemisphere; and third, that the conference should be called at such time as the projects have been suitably prepared and the preliminary work of the Pan-American jurists is available. Mr. Kellogg advised Chairman Porter that while he was not prepared to say that the time was propitious for a conference on international law, he thought it would be well, if Congress were favorably disposed toward American participation, to make an appropriation which would enable the government to send representatives whenever an invitation is received.

Mr. Tinkham, author of the resolution, foresees either the rejection by the league of nations of the American conditions of adherence to the league court, or the withdrawal of adherence by the United States as a consequence of political developments in the United States. In either event an obstacle to a conference for the codification of international law will be removed, and the United States can freely cooperate with other nations for the "development and administration of international justice by judicial decision only."

The codification of international law as an indispensable prerequisite to the establishment of a world court was the idea of jurists appointed by the league of nations to consider the subject. In this committee was Elihu Root. The recommendations of the committee were rejected by the league and the league court was established, in spite of the chaotic condition of some branches of international law and in spite of the fact that the covenant of the league of nations attempts to set up law which is in conflict with well established principles of international law. Secretary Kellogg very properly imposes as a condition of American participation in a conference the stipulation that Pan-American conceptions of law shall have equal consideration with the projects offered by the league of nations.

Law must be agreed upon by the nations before any court can administer justice between nations. No nation in the Americas will submit a vital controversy to a court which makes its own law, or which accepts as law the politico-military provisions of the covenant of the league of nations. There can be no true world court until there is true world law, enacted by each nation according to its constitution. The Tinkham resolution paves the way for the establishment of world law by agreement of all nations, meeting as equals at The Hague. The international conference which the Netherlands government has in mind, and which the Tinkham resolution proposes, may not materialize until Europe has finally abandoned the experiment of the league of nations; but from present tendencies it appears probable that the incubus of the league may have disappeared by the time the jurists now at work on a preliminary scheme of international law have completed their labors.

The Department of Labor reports that the number of employes in 9,836 manufacturing establishments of the United States declined slightly in May as compared with April, but increased slightly as compared with May, 1925. Average wages in the manufacturing institutions of the United States have increased 200 per cent over the average wages in 1913 and 1914.

The House refuses to adjourn June 30. Already about 100 members have gone home. Perhaps the House may adjourn under a process of gradual elimination.

VIEWS OF OUR READERS ON LIVE TOPICS OF THE DAY

Sesquicentennial, Says Writer, Should Call to Mind That the Underlying Influence of American Independence Was Calvinism—Quotes Froude to the Effect That John Calvin "Was Virtual Founder of America."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Back of every great constructive movement in the world's history; back of the immediate causes that seem to have been responsible for every such movement, one finds as the original source of action certain spiritual and moral principles—a thousand, or a million, human hearts that beat in like tempo and from which are the issues of a new life.

While we celebrate the sesquicentennial of our national independence let us not forget the ultimate causes.

While our splendid railroad trains carry us through fertile fields and hustling cities to the sesquicentennial exposition grounds, with their staggering display of cultural and industrial wealth, let us not forget "the rock whence we were hewn and the hole of the pit whence we were digged."

Surely, there must have been some tremendously powerful force which set this greatest of all nations going, which led the thirteen colonies to unified and successful action against the then mightiest nation of the world. Men have described that force as the spirit of independence. But the thoughtful mind is hardly satisfied with that description. The barbarians of Europe, too, in the time of the Roman Caesars, were imbued with a spirit of independence. They fought, and with a remarkable degree of success. But they never founded anything like a democratic world power such as our American republic is.

A disinterested study of the life of the American colonists and a thorough examination of their letters and documents, political, social and ecclesiastical, lead one to the definite conclusion that the spirt of indepedence which found such a glorious and eloquent expression in the war of the Revolution, was a product of religious convictions. Those convictions were chiefly of the Calvinistic type. Two-thirds of the 3,000,000 inhabitants in the colonies, at the outbreak of the Revolution, were Calvinists. That implies no criticism of other religions. It is simply a statement of historical fact.

The Pilgrims, the Puritans, the Scotch, the Scotch-Irish, the Huguenots, the Dutch, those of the German Palatinate, all were Calvinists, spiritual sons of John Calvin, the Genevan reformer. Now, the cardinal doctrine of Calvinism is not, as is generally thought, that of predestination, but that of the absolute sovereignty of Almighty God. The inference is plain. If God is "absolutely" sovereign, then all men are free and equal, and the world's political rulers may only exercise such power as God has delegated to them. There is no divine right of kings; there is only a delegated right, limited by the Christian code of religion and ethics—the Bible. When political rulers refuse to honor that code, they become tyrants. George III earned that obnoxious title for himself, and the American Calvinists, bent on defending the absolute sovereignty of God and their own freedom, resisted him with determination and enthusiasm. They crushed tyranny and then proceeded to apply their glorious principles of liberty to the building of a nation the like of which God nor man had seen.

True, the political philosophy of revolutionary France, and certain other influences, played a role; but unbiased students of history will always subscribe to the tributes of great historians like Froude, Ranke and Bancroft when they ascribe to Calvinism the honor of having freed America, and many will not hesitate to indorse the remark of Froude, that "John Calvin was the virtual founder of America."

Horace Walpole described the situation very wittily in the English house of commons when he said, "America has run off with a Presbyterian parson, and that is the end of it."

And in conclusion, does the suggestion seem out of place that a revival of true Calvinism would be a better remedy for our varied social and political ills than the hundred and one concoctions that Americans have been made to swallow, lo, these many years?

Protective Tariff Data Stated as Answer to Address Broadcast Denouncing as a Crime Legislation Which Taxes Foreign-made Products in Favor of American Producers as a Foil to Competition of Underpaid Labor.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Last night some one, in broadcasting a speech upon matters before Congress, made use of the statement that the main difficulty with the farmers was that the protective tariff is an obstacle to their prosperity, and denounced as a "crime" the legislation that levies upon foreign producers a tax which protects American producers from merciless competition with underpaid labor.

It is impossible to let any such statement go unanswered since, years ago, this fallacy was exploded by a very careful study of the facts, which facts were widely disseminated throughout the country.

In 1916 the bureau of labor statistics of the Department of Labor published a table of figures showing the prices of fifteen staple commodities in June of each year from 1912 to 1916, inclusive. This table was presented to the Senate by Jacob H. Gallinger, August 28, 1916. In 1912 there was a fairly protective tariff law in effect; in 1913 the Underwood act came into force, and in 1914 war was declared in Europe, so we are concerned principally with the prices which obtained in June of 1912 and June of 1914 (before the war).

During these two years and after the near-free-trade law had become operative, prices had advanced as follows: Sirloin steak, 10 per cent; round steak, 14 per cent; rib roast, 6 per cent; pork chops, 14 per cent; bacon, 11 per cent; ham, 10 per cent; pure lard, 4 per cent; hens, 10 per cent; strictly fresh eggs, 6 per cent; fresh milk, 3 per cent, and creamery butter, which had risen 4 per cent in 1913 went back to the 1912 price in 1914.

However, there were some reductions in prices, and these were upon items more directly the product of the farm, viz: Wheat flour fell off 9 per cent; cornmeal, 1 per cent, and Irish potatoes, 23 per cent. That is what low tariff did to the farmers. It raised the price of manufactured or prepared goods and lowered the values of wheat, corn and potatoes.

Need any one be reminded of the further facts, compiled by me in 1916, that during the ten months after the Underwood provisions were in force and before the European war there was an increase of $88,000,000 in imports and a decrease of $342,000,000 in exports, which reversed our balance of trade?

Among other things that occurred in those ten months were the closing down of many sugar factories and steel mills. Cotton mills were forced out of business. Factories that remained open reduced their output. Stocks depreciated at the rate of $1,000,000 a day. Three million wage earners were put out of employment. There were 350,000 freight cars idle, as were the locomotives, engineers, freight handlers, firemen, brakemen and others depending upon their operation. Sixty per cent of the railroad mileage was in the hands of receivers and, of course, dividends were passed. Railroad gross earnings dropped at the rate of $10,000,000 a month, or $100,000,000 in these black ten months. Bread lines were the longest ever known, and there was the greatest demand for charity.

I do not know who was the dodgaster who so polluted the air with misstatements last night; but I am of the opinion that what he knows about the tariff is mostly what is not so; and my recommendaion to Congress is that before adjourning it put on the statute books a law that will empower some authority to so regulate radio broadcasting as to deny its use for the spreading of misinformation.

Treatment of Negro in Vicinity of Suburban Gardens Is Held by Writer to Be Out of Accord With Official Warning of Maj. Hesse Against "Infliction of Cruel and Unnecessary Punishment," in Making Arrests.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

May I have space to note an inaccuracy or two in the report of the disturbance occurring in the vicinity of the Suburban gardens toward the close of last night, as it appears in The Post of this morning.

The article says that "Officer Schmylko emptied his revolver at the negro as he fell to the ground." This is true, but not all of the truth.

I was at the end of the bridge on my way back to the gardens when I observed the fleeing negro coming toward me followed by the bleeding officer with pistol in hand. He fired two shots at him on the run and the latter fell to the ground just around the end of the bridge, where the officer bending over him and cursing wildly continued to pump the shots at or into him, exhausting which he proceeded to repeatedly beat him with his club, while the prostrate negro was moaning piteously "Don't let him kill me."

This near tragic incident, emphasizing the timely need for the official warning just issued by Maj. Hesse to the force against the "infliction of cruel and unnecessary punishment" may be viewed, when the general attitude and accustomed loose behavior of some white officers on duty among colored citizens, as an inescapable corollary to the conditions about which colored citizens about the gardens have become reasonably alarmed.

Officers of the Universal Development and Loan Co., which operates the Suburban gardens as a high-class amusement park for colored citizens, maintaining three special officers for duty therein, have hitherto been so successful in preserving a proper decorum among the great numbers who seek amusement at the gardens as to merit and receive unstinted commendation at the hands of the police department.

We feel convinced that a fair investigation of the recent trouble will disclose such facts as will lead to certain reforms of officer deportment and practice and so enhance the prestige of our police department as well as prove highly gratifying to the above company and the citizens generally of this section.

Memorial to the Valor and Sacrifices of the American Merchant Marine Suggested — Hains Point Urged as Site of Virile Tribute to the Men Who Go Down Into the Sea in Ships.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Is there in the Capital city a marker of any kind erected to the valor, sacrifices and services of American merchantmen?

Now if there is yet time may not the vacant strip of land at the extreme end of Hains point be preserved as a logical location for a long-delayed memorial to the men who go to sea in merchant ships? It is a location that even now brings a thrill to the Americans who visit it. This site commands a view of shipping and a majestic view of the Potomac as it flows from the Capital of this United States to the sea. A monument at this strategical position would bring to the minds of the thousands who visit Hains point the dignity of service in our American merchant marine.

Our merchantmen responded to the calls made on them in the great war. They manned many ships that carried troops, food and ammunition through the submarine zone to war areas and played their part in winning the war. But America perhaps has forgotten the call for "Ships! Ships! Ships!" Let us not now forget, then, the men who manned them.

Our merchantmen render quiet, yet actual service to our nation during long years of peace, when results and not just experimental play and polished social conduct is required of them. In addition to their deeds of bravery in adverse weather, merchantmen live a life of sacrifice even during peace times. They are forced to spend the greater part of their lives on the water and aboard ship, away from home and family comforts. The rest of us, even our soldiers, meanwhile, enjoy our homes and bask in the comforts the merchantmen convey to us from other lands and seldom do we give a thought to the part their services play in bringing us the comforts of life.

There are few memorials to the American merchantmen, or their deeds, individually or collectively. They are men of few words, like Capt. Fried, now nationally known. They do not care for lionization. Like the men of the overworked, underpaid and little-appreciated American foreign consular service, their numbers are so scattered at far-flung points about the globe that they can never meet in convention in sufficient numbers to advertise themselves and obtain through team work organized glory and the honor and prestige that is given their profession by other older nations.

Then let there be recognition by the nation of that mighty arm of our government—the merchantmen and the American merchant marine. Let there be a marker of some sort, if erected, to take the form, in granite or marble, of the beautiful bow and bridge of a modern ship. Let it be impressive as is the calling of the sea—emblematic of a calling in which women have not begun even to make a foothold and in which, perhaps, women never will. Make it vital like the man's world that it is. Let us for once do away with the use of symbolic weeping women or mermaids in this memorial to our American merchant marine and our American merchantmen.

Admirer of Col. Archibald Hopkins Would Honor His Memory by Promoting His Most Cherished Wish and His Chief Patriotic Interest, That of Providing an Earlier Inauguration of Presidents and Vice Presidents.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Among those who have had the privilege of calling Archibald Hopkins their friend will be found many of your readers. For in many articles has the colonel given expression to his views through your columns. It is difficult to believe that the charm of his personality and the inspiration he gave to us all through his broad patriotic sympathies are now beyond our reach. Words can do but little to express the tribute of respectful love and admiration we would lay upon his grave. Let us find something better with which to honor his memory. As a man of most unselfish character, as a patriot whose love for and devotion to his country was ever his first thought and endeavor, Col. Hopkins stands second to none. As our beloved friend and distinguished fellow citizen let us prove our affection for him by deeds and not words. Let us set to work to promote one of his most cherished interests.

Col. Hopkins and the writer of these lines were among the loyal Americans who lived through the four terrible years of the civil war, when the very existence of our life as a nation was at stake. Every incident connected with those days is burned upon our memories. What anxious days those were immediately following the election of President Lincoln and until his inauguration on the following March 4! Nor shall we ever forget our anxiety through the last year of Buchanan's administration when the chief executive of the republic no longer represented the will of the people. It is humiliating to think that members of a representative form of government should so mismanage their own affairs, then as now, that they would seem to be unable to determine what was most important for the welfare of the country. They could not imagine the grave consequences that would ensue through postponement of what seemed to them a trivial matter, the date of Lincoln's inauguration.

The writer, after much consideration of the subject and after consulting many eminent patriots and jurists, among these being Elihu Root, an authority upon constitutional and international law, who gave his hearty approval to the measure, brought this matter to Col. Hopkins for his consideration. His ever ready sympathy with all patriotic measures was at once enlisted and since then, nearly six years ago, we have worked untiringly toward that end. For several years it has been one of Col. Hopkins' most cherished public interests that an amendment to the Constitution should be made providing for an earlier inauguration of our President and Vice President. Mr. Root had stated that the proposed reform could not be made by act of Congress but that it would require an amendment to the Constitution. "Make the issue a simple one," he said, "express clearly to the people why it is desirable for the welfare of the country that the date of inauguration should be changed from the fourth of March to the fourth of December, and they will support it."

What greater tribute to Col. Hopkins' memory can we pay today than by promoting one of his chief patriotic interests? Let us extend our efforts by working toward this end from this time forth. The opposition to be overcome is not one that involves principle but simply that of inertia, that baneful influence which is so constantly destroying the progress of worthy measures of reform.

One joint resolution has already been passed by the Senate. It remains to be acted upon in perfected form, perhaps, by both houses.

Patience

(From The Christian Science Monitor.)

Patience is one of the highest expressions of goodness. It is the result of the spiritual perception that comprehends a difficulty and lovingly helps to remove it. How often have words of kindly encouragement, patiently and wisely spoken, lifted from sad hearts the shadows of sin and suffering, and permeated the whole dark experience with the light of hope! In all nature we find this quality beautifully expressed. The warm sunshine and the soft breezes of spring patiently coax open the delicate, lovely buds; the great trees with outstretched limbs patiently await the coming of the gentle spring rains to bring forth the tender leaves along their stark branches. How patiently the mother bird broods over her nest, feeds the little gaping mouths, and with patience born of confidence encourages each fledgling to try its wings!

The quality of patience is not given only to a few here and there. It is an attribute of God Himself, and is, in reality, possessed by every one of His children in full measure. In Christian Science mortals are learning how to express this quality in the stress and strain of human contacts. This Science removes the fear attendant upon these conditions, and teaches us with patient love to await the result of the working of Truth when applied to any ill of mortal existence.

Behind all impatience is fear lest what the material senses behold is true, whether it be sickness, sinful qualities, or inharmonious relations. Spiritual understanding enables one to discern in place of the broken, imperfect pattern of mortal sense, the perfect model of God's creating. Patience is accompanied by tenderness and loving-kindness for all those who are suffering with fear from these false concepts. In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (pp. 365, 366) Mrs. Eddy writes, "The poor suffering heart needs its rightful nutriment, such as peace, patience in tribulation, and a priceless sense of the dear Father's loving-kindness."

The tender heart of the great Master went out to sin-sick and discouraged mortals along his way. And he said, knowing what he had to give them: "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls." Christian Science is showing to each one of these seekers that this "me" to which the Master invited them to come, was not a limited personality, but the Christ-idea which animated him, the most patient one who ever walked the earth. To his disciples, who felt that to forgive seven times was doing much, he said, "I say not unto thee, Until seven times: but, Until seventy times seven!"

Jesus' method of forgiving sin was to apply the truth which destroyed it—the understanding of man's unity with God and the consequent unreality of any qualities underived from God. He knew that the understanding which his followers were gaining through his words and works would give them the patience to forgive "until seventy times seven." He knew when to rebuke, and when to encourage. To the downtrodden, the sick, and the sinning—to every false situation possible in human experience—he spoke the word so wisely that the situation was healed. His patience was born of that wisdom from above which he knew belongs to man as God's image and likeness. With his profound understanding he knew that there was a solution to every problem; and with patient obedience to the Christ-ideal he waited with certainty the outcome, thanking his Father-Mother God that He always heard him, even before the manifestation of healing had come. There was no taint of self-will, self-justification, or self-love to make Jesus impatient. He knew and taught, as Christian Science is teaching today, that the children of the Father reflect only those qualities and powers derived from God. He could feel no impatience, because he knew the allness of God, good, and saw the Father's image despite the debris of mortal sense attempting to hide it.

Thus it becomes possible for us to reflect this divine Mind which Christ Jesus reflected, and thereby to recognize at all times the Christ-ideal. To help the fallen one to rise; to show the weary one the restful Principle of all right activity; to point the discouraged and fearful one to the goal and to the infinite wisdom which enables him to reach it—all this, in patient obedience to the divine Principle of our being, God, we can accomplish. In "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany" (p. 247) Mrs. Eddy thus writes: "The little that I have accomplished has all been done through love—self forgetful, patient, unfaltering tenderness."

HER DAUGHTER SUFFERED WITH AWFUL HEADACHES

DAUGHTER NEVER HAS HEADACHES ANYMORE

"My daughter suffered agony every now and then with fearful headaches which nearly drove her mad and made her irritable, cross and half sick, but, thank goodness, I read an advertisement telling about these wonderful tablets being put out by the Harper Company and sat right down and sent them 25 cents in stamps for a tube. The tablets came in the next mail and the very next day my daughter had one of those awful spells. She'd tried everything and didn't believe they would help her, but in just a few minutes — like magic — the headache went away. They are wonderful," declares a lady in Virginia.

Nearly everyone has headaches this time of year—neuralgia, too. Get a bottle of Harper's Headache Tablets at the drug store or send 25c in stamps for bottle prepaid. Robert N. Harper Co., 467 C St. N.W., Washington, D. C.

HARRIS-EWING

By BERTHA R. MARTIN.

THE President and Mrs. Coolidge are passing the last few days before their summer holidays in entertaining at the White House their son, Mr. John C. Coolidge, who arrived here last week after the close of the scholastic year at Amherst college.

Contrary to expectations, young Mr. Coolidge will not pass all of his vacation period at White Pine camp, as he is planning to attend summer school. There is no doubt, however, but that Mr. Coolidge, junior, will enjoy some weeks with his parents in the Adirondacks. This will be good news for the younger set of the summer colony in that vicinity, as the son of the President is a most welcome guest always and he has many friends and college acquaintances in that neighborhood.

Mrs. Coolidge puts aside other engagements to pass her time with her son when he is in town, and it has been an attractive sight to see them walking or riding about the Capital deep in conversation while Mrs. Coolidge's pride and affection for her tall boy is most apparent.

THE news that the President and Mrs. Coolidge probably will leave the White House for a few months next fall or winter when the repairs to the White House roof are in progress recalls other incidents when American Presidents have been obliged to seek temporary quarters outside of the executive mansion.

The first occasion of this nature was brought about through the invasion of Washington by British soldiery in 1814 and the burning by them of the White House. The President and Mrs. Dolly Madison were offered shelter in Col. Tayloe's "Octagon house" on the northeast corner of New York avenue and Eighteenth street northwest. That house is still standing, one of the treasured landmarks of the city.

When the first year was out the President and Mrs. Madison moved to the famous Six buildings on the corner of Pennsylavania avenue and Nineteenth street northwest. During his residence in these temporary homes President Madison maintained the formality and brilliancy of his high office.

The President and Mrs. Roosevelt, during the repairs to the White House, which included the addition of the wings to that colonial mansion, occupied a roomy house in Jackson place northwest, which is now suitably marked in commemoration of that event.

THE President and Mrs. Coolidge have not announced definitely as yet where they will stay during the time the White House roof is being repaired, but it is understood that there has been some talk of their staying at the Willard hotel, where they stopped during the President's entire term as Vice President.

The repairs at the White House probably will seriously affect the official program of the season, because while state dinners can be given in other quarters, the state receptions would lack the impressiveness that such assemblages assume from their setting in the historic state rooms of the executive mansion.

However, a roof is a roof, whether it is over Presidents or humbler folk, and it must be repaired, even at the cost of some of the social brilliancy of next season.

It is amusing to note in a letter from Mrs. John Adams, known in history as Abigail Adams, that the unfinished state of the White House apartments was the bane of her existence at the time of her regime there. Poor Mrs. Adams wrote:

"The house is made habitable, but there is not a single apartment finished, and all within inside, except the plastering has been done since Briesler came. We have not the least fence, yard, or other convenience without, and the great unfinished audience room (the east room) I make a drying room of, to hang up the clothes in."

THE nonadjournment of Congress deprived the Vice President of the pleasure of joining Mrs. Dawes in being host for the Crown Prince of Sweden and the Crown Princess at their home in Evanston, Ill.

Chicago greeted the Swedish royal couple with the genuine welcome that has been extended to them throughout their entire American tour. Luncheons, dinners and receptions were given for them by the elite of the Windy city.

Two cabinet officers, the Secretary of State, Mr. Frank B. Kellogg, and the Secretary of the Interior, Dr. Hubert Work, have gone to their home States to take part in the receptions accorded to the crown prince and crown princess when they arrive there.

Today the royal visitors will reach St. Paul, where they will be entertained by the Secretary of State and Mrs. Kellogg in their spacious home.

On July 2 the crown prince and crown princess will be greeted by the Secretary of the Interior, Dr. Work, when they arrive at the Yellowstone National park to make a tour of our national parks. Similar entertainments will signalize the rest of the trip to the Pacific coast for the princely guests.

* * * *

MANY senators and other notables will go to Philadelphia on the Fourth of July to take part in the celebration there in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence in quaint Independence hall in that city. President Coolidge is to make the principal address of the day and will ring the historic Liberty bell with his own hand.

* * * *

WHILE Congress is waiting for the signal from leaders to "fold its tents like the Arabs" and depart for fence-building engagements in home districts, many congressional families, now schools have closed for the summer, have left Washington, leaving pater familias behind to attend to this official duties on Capitol Hill. Indications now are, however, that Congress will adjourn not later than July 15 and much earlier, if possible. Therefore, we will see the Capital city deserted by its congressional guests for at least the first two months of the recess.

THE Washington bouquet of June brides has been completed during the last week. There will be a surcease in weddings until the fall, so far as society is concerned, unless we are favored with more of the surprise variety, a practice which is coming more and more into vogue with Washington belles who wish to escape the formalities and festivities of previously announced wedding dates.

THE members of the diplomatic corps are later than usual in making definite plans for their summer vacations. Due to the unusual cool weather this summer, the members of the corps have not felt the need to establish a summer embassy or legation. Of course, some of them have their favorite summer resorts and go there year after year. Newport is popular, as is Bar Harbor, while others go to their own country on leave of absence. The Dean of the Diplomatic Corps and Mme. Riano pass the greater part of the summer in Washington with occasional trips over week-ends. Mme. Riano usually goes to York Harbor to visit her sister, Mrs. Chandler P. Anderson, for August. The Belgian Ambassador and Baroness de Cartier have gone to Europe, as is their custom. The British Ambassador, Sir Esme Howard, has established the summer embassy at Manchester, Mass., a spot chosen several years ago by former Ambassador and Lady Geddes. Lady Isabella Howard is in England. The German Ambassador and Baroness Maltzan are both in Europe, where they will remain until late in the autumn. The Minister of Portugal, Viscount d'Alte, and the Minister of Denmark, Mr. Constantine Brun, will go to Bar Harbor as has been their custom for a number of years. The Minister of Norway and Mme. Bryn with their family go to Skyland, Va. The Hungarian Minister and Countess Szechenyi have abandoned Newport this year and will pass the summer at their home in Hungary. Countess Szechenyi and their children are there now and they will be joined shortly by the Minister.

The Serbian Minister, Dr. Pavichich, makes an annual trip to his home in Europe and will sail shortly. Mme. Bizauskiene, wife of the Minister of Lithuania, and Mme. Bostrom, wife of the Minister of Sweden.

Ciechanowska will go to Manchester, Mass. Mme. Ciechanowska will depart Wednesday, but the Minister will remain here until the middle of July.

Senor Don Cayetano de Quesada, attache of the Cuban embassy, will depart Tuesday for Cuba, where he will pass several weeks.

Mrs. R. M. Mansford, of 1320 Emerson street northwest, departed Thursday to open her summer home on the Hudson near West Point, where she will remain until late in September.

Dr. Francisco G. Yanes, counselor of the Venezuelan legation, has just returned to the United States after a short visit to his home country and is staying at the Willard. Dr. Yanes entertained informally at luncheon yesterday on the Willard roof.

Miss Brady Is Married.

The marriage of Miss Frances Hawthorne Brady, daughter of Mrs. Thomas Grayson Brady, and Maj. Ernest Harvey Van Fossan took place at noon yesterday at the Church of the Covenant, the pastor, the Rev. Dr. Charles Wood, officiating. The church was decorated with Australian ferns, pink rambler roses and delphinium. The bride wore a gown of ivory satin made with a long full skirt and the bodice trimmed with lovely old family lace, which outlined the decollete and formed cuffs to the long sleeves coming in points over the hands. The tulle veil made the train and fell from a coronet of lace which her mother had worn on her wedding day. She carried a bouquet of calla lillies.

Miss Brady was attended by Miss Jean Van Fossan, sister of the bridegroom, as maid of honor, who wore a gown of lavender crepe chiffon and a large picture hat of lavender horsehair braid. Mrs. Johnson Camden, of Norfolk, sister-in-law of the bride, was matron of honor who was gowned in a costume of pink crepe chiffon and a hat to match, similar to that of the maid of honor. They carried sweet peas in the color of Phi Psi, the bridegroom's fraternity.

The bridesmaids were Miss Alma Hawthorne, of Asheville, N. C.; Mrs. Louis Montfort, this city; Mrs. Amos Pagter, formerly of Clarksburg, W. Va.; Mrs. Joseph Claffey, formerly of Parkersburg, W. Va.; Mrs. John Barnes Milliken, of this city. Their gowns were of taffeta in pastel shades of pink, orchid, green, blue and yellow-combined with malines and made with bouffant skirts. The hats which matched in colors were made of horsehair and trimmed with malines. They all carried bouquets of garden flowers. On one arm they carried half hoops which formed an arch at the close of the marriage ceremony.

The bride's nephew, Master J. Camden Brady, jr., of Norfolk, Va., was ring bearer. Mr. Lisle A. Smith, of this city, acted as best man, and the ushers were Mr. Robert Leland Van Fossan, of New York; Mr. Austin C. Waller, Mr. John Barnes Milliken, Mr. Parke-Galleger, Mr. Bruce Clarke, all of this city.

The entire bridal party with the parents received at a reception immediately following the ceremony. Mrs. Brady, mother of the bride, wore a gown of black and white chiffon and a hat to match, and she had a corsage of lavender sweet peas. Mrs. Van Fossan, mother of the groom, was gowned in beige chiffon with a hat to match, and she carried a corsage of butterfly roses. Later Maj. and Mrs. Van Fossan departed on a wedding trip for White Sulphur Springs, the latter wearing a traveling costume of black satin crepe with a cape of black lined in white and a small black satin hat. On their return Maj. and Mrs. Van Fossan will make their home at the Wardman Park hotel.

Out-of-town guests were Mr. and Mrs. Thomas M. Brady and son, of Savannah, Ga.; Capt. and Mrs. J. Camden Brady and two sons, of Norfolk, Va.; Judge and Mrs. James W. Robinson, of Clarksburg, W. Va.; Mr. and Mrs. William Harvey Van Fossan, Miss Jean Van Fossan, Miss Virginia Van Fossan, of Lisbon, Ohio; Mrs. Ernest M. Hurd, of Maplewood, N. J.; Mr. Harry C. Bulkley and Mr. Frank Morrison, of Detroit, Mich., and many others.

Miss Brady was born in Clarksburg, W. Va., and has made her home for the past eighteen years in Washington. She is widely known in this city, having held the position of assistant to the director general of railroads, the highest woman official of the railroad administration during the war, and has taken a prominent part in the Red Cross. Since the war she has been actively engaged in various philanthropic work.

Maj. Van Fossan was born in Lisbon, Ohio, and is a graduate of the Oberlin college, class of 1909, and took his legal degree at the Columbia university in 1913. He entered the world war in April, 1917, serving in various camps and later in the Secretary of War's office. He holds the commission of major in the judge advocate general reserve. He was a member of the War Department claims board and chief counsel of the war credits board; he served with the special Panama canal commission and later as assistant counsel and director of claims of the United States Shipping Board. The past two years he has been practicing law in Washington, and a few weeks ago was appointed by President Coolidge a member of the United States board of tax appeals.

Townsend—Nichols.

The wedding took place yesterday afternon at 4 o'clock in the Mount Zion M. E. Church, of Miss Lillian Gladys Nichols, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Nichols, and Mr. Ralph Townshend, son of Mrs. Lottie Evans Townshend. The Rev. A. O. Lyons officiated. The church was decorated with potted palms and cut summer blossoms. The Meditation from Thais and the Lohengrin wedding march were played for the nuptual music.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, had chosen for her gown white taffeta made period style, with the fitted bodice and the very full skirt, and thrown gracefully around her neck and shoulders, she had a tull scarf. She wore a large picture hat of Neapolitan straw and carried a bouquet of white roses and lilies of the valley.

Fashions of Capital Women

By VYLLA POE WILSON.

WITH the departure of "mah jong" as the ultra-fashionable game and the arrival of "stomachion," fostered by the Prince of Wales and his London set, we may expect to see the mah jong styles replaced by those of the new pastime. For it is certainly true that each new game fad brings in an accompanying clothes vogue.

Stomachion, which is really 2,000 years and therefore a revival, bids fair to be the "game" of the summer, at least among those interested enough to obtain a set of its pieces and to learn how to play it.

The tide of fashion wooers will probably turn to London, where experts are busy teaching the new game to belles, debutantes and matrons in order to give stomachion a running start for its career as the paramount recreation of next winter in the capitals of the world.

Something new to do is one of the greatest cards of admission to the front ranks of popularity in social circles. Therefore, the belles or matrons anxious to be sought for as guests of hostesses during the formal season might occupy some of her vacation time to no better advantage than in learning to play stomachion.

Bridge Is Coming Back.

There is a political angle in Washington in these new games as well. Over the bridge or the mah jong tables strong bonds of sympathy can be created for one's pet bill in Senate or House or for some candidate for high office in whose fortunes you are interested. The clever woman who realizes that work is an essential part of a conscientious politician's wife's day will also realize that she must learn how to play the game of the hour as well.

A well-balanced day for official women includes not only luncheon and dinner parties, afternoon teas and club and organization meetings, as well as a helping hand to charitable affairs, but a working knowledge of the games with which other women pass part of their time.

Several years ago the boudoirs and drawing rooms of Washington echoed and reechoed with the click of mah jong pieces as the exclusive set ardently adopted the fad of playing the ancient Chinese game. While mah jong devotees still exist here and there, bridge has come back into its own.

Stomachion, however, bids fair to be a formidable rival of bridge, mah jong, and cross-word puzzles.

This ancient game dovetails in most admirably with the modernist ideas of color and design. The game sets already seen here in several houses where the hostess has returned from London this spring are composed of rectangles of ivory or ebony pieces cut out by a jig saw into 14 triangular and polygonal pieces, according to a scheme devised by the original inventor of the game, Archimedes. "Stomachion" is frequently mentioned in the classics.

Research Revives Game.

The pieces are to be fitted together in an infinite variety of arrangement in the forms of animals, birds, and other figures. The ancients, past masters in the art of training the memory and powers of observation, considered the playing of stomachion to be a salient means to these ends.

So scientific is this game that R. D. Oldham, geologist of the Royal society in London, constructed the first modern set after patient search through newly-discovered manuscripts in Greek, Latin and Arabic. Mr. Oldham, who is a scientist, first last and all the time, has become suddenly much sought after by the smartest members of London society, for not only is he an oracle on the intricacies of the game as played by the Greeks, but he also holds in his hand the key to the making of the mystic pieces which can not be procured at the present time in any other way. His first set made, after careful research, was the first one made in 1,500 years.

The evolution of games and the revival of the old ones have had a decided effect on the clothes of women in the last decade. The dashing ping pong girl of the nineties wore her insignia in the form of little ping pong brackets and balls embroidered on her shirtwaist sleeve. Her sport costume for golf and ping pong alike included a long, full skirt, a mannish shirtwaist pulled in under a wide belt to make a wasp-like waistline. With this she wore a stiff sailor hat, just like brother's, perched high on top of her pompadour, said pompadour padded out with which the Floradora chorus described as "rats."

Pieces Embroidered.

Before the days of the ping pong girl, the woman of leisure and her schoolgirl daughters and sisters played gracehoops, dashing about most gracefully in spite of the impeding effect of hoopskirts and tightly fitted basques and the reducing confining stays.

As women entered more and more in the field of outdoor sport, first they made their skirts shorter and then a few brave souls, led by the college girl, discarded their stays, thereby bringing upon themselves an avalanche of criticism from the reformers. But the short skirts would be called long now and the younger generations have never been hampered by stays.

Just as the ping pong implements were embroidered on the sleeves of the belles of the late nineties, the golf sticks and tennis rackets on those of their more progressive sisters; the mah jong pieces on the sleeves and in the designs of the pins of matrons and maids of a few years ago, so we will see on all sides for the next few months, without doubt, strange shapes which have their inspiration from the pastime of 2,000 years ago.

When the woman of 1927 wears her stomachion-designed gown to attend one of the aerial teas which are becoming a matter of course in the Capital and resorts of the Old World, the old and the new will certainly have joined hands.

These aerial teas are, of course, the outcome of the increasing number of men and women who have gone in for aviation with the same enthusiasm they went in for motoring a few years ago. The new world will, without doubt, follow the lead of the old and our young men and women will also buy planes and get pilot licenses and fly to the tea parties and take their friends "up" afterward. The guests are served their tea on terra firma to the cheerful drone of the airplane wings and with the prospect of a spin in the air between the cups of tea, much on the order of a tea dance, but with flights taking the place of dancing.

wife of Lieut. Comdr. Murray, of the United States naval air service, in a costume of navy blue chiffon, made with a one-piece dress with a narrow inset vestee of gold edged with red. The skirt has applied cording designs about the hem. The cape comes nearly to the hem and has a scarf collar worn close about the throat. Her hat is of hand-woven Italian straw, the same shade as the gown, and has a cockade of red feathers holding the grosgrained ribbon band in place.

Lady Astor Is Defied.

Lady Astor, American girl member of the British parliament, who has been dictating to the other women members on such matters as the proper kind of clothes to wear to the sessions and other details of etiquette, has met her Waterloo in Miss Susan Lawrence, one of the four present members. She has declared that she will wear pretty and becoming clothes if she wants to, instead of the somber garb advocated by Lady Astor, and also insisted on a smoking room for the women members, although heretofore Lady Astor has sternly decreed that such a convenience was not necessary. At present Miss Lawrence uses the room all alone, but she expresses the opinion that as more and more women are elected to parliament it will more frequently become the sequestered nook in which the women lawmakers may have a quiet puff. The United States House of Representatives has not had to solve the woman's smoking room problem for its members as yet. Probably this is because, so far as is known, the women elected to that body have not been addicts of Lady Nicotine.

In the matter of clothes, however, the women members of the United States Congress are evidently in accord with Lady Astor. Each of them, from Miss Jeannette Rankin, the first one, to the present three, have shown a decided preference for dark clothes. Representative Florence Kahn, of California, and Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, of Massachusetts, are both in mourning, but Representative Mary T. Norton, of New Jersey, also wears black most of the time, lightened by a touch of her favorite green or peacock blue. On some of the warm days Mrs. Norton has attended the sessions all in white.

Her Summer Clothes White.

Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt, Assistant Attorney General of the United States, who is young and attractive, wears for her business hours very modish costumes of black or dark blue or in the summer time tailored white clothes. Mrs. Willebrandt has the faculty of always looking well dressed which is probably due to the smart simple lines and handsome materials she affects.

The attractions of the many little picnic places and wayside taverns which have sprung up around Washington in these days of easy transportation lure the members of the diplomatic corps and Washington society generally into the country for dinner.

Mme. Riano, wife of the Spanish Ambassador, wore at a dinner party at Rose Hill, Md., in a quaint old house which has been converted into an inn, a gown of white cashmere, made on straight lines with a Paisley scarf worn Deauville fashion about her throat. Her hat was a wide one of black straw.

Mrs. J. J. O'Malley, wife of Dr. O'Malley of the United States navy, is wearing a dress of green linen, made in two-piece effect. Her hat is a small one of beige straw, trimmed in green.

Parasols Are Varied.

At the many al fresco affairs of recent weeks the picturesque note has been stressed by the many types of sunshades carried by the women guests. They have varied from flowery Japan and China types to French concoctions of chiffon and ribbon more often than not trimmed with fur, the ones of plain silks with snubby handles, and all embroidered with real lace. Of course, with the return of the parasol for other kinds of wear the outdoor sport girl also adds one to match her white or brilliant colored linen or mesh silk costume.

Mrs. Coolidge has stocked her wardrobe this summer with many attractive white costumes, which may be used at the White House or add to the picture at the summer White House, the camp in the New York mountains. Mrs. Coolidge wore a white dress recently of heavy white crepelike corded silk, made perfectly plain, and embellished with large motifs of cut-out work, forming a low-placed girdle, and deep inverted point to the skirt and the lower part of the long sleeves. With this she wore a white straw hat.

Mrs. Dawes is also wearing white a great deal, and was seen shopping last week in a sport suit of white flannel, made with a plain skirt and hip-length tailored jacket, and a soft white silk blouse pleated and tucked in the front. She had on one of the new white felt hats with a rather wide brim and high crushed crown.

Mrs. Bell Also Likes White.

Like Mrs. Coolidge, Mrs. Charles J. Bell is fond of white costumes, and especially when she entertains on the lawns of Twin Oaks. Recently Mrs. Bell had a few guests in for tea under the twin oaks when she wore a costume of white crepe de chine made in two-piece effect, with a rather high collar turned over, and long sleeves. Her hat was a wide-brimmed straw one.

Mrs. Hugh Wilson, wife of the State Department official, had on at a luncheon a handsome white hand-made crepe de chine dress, made on plain tailored lines, with no other embellishments but rows of fine hemstitching. She wore a small white felt hat.

Mrs. Thomas W. Phillips, wife of Representative Phillips, is wearing a gown of black chiffon, with deep insets of cream lace. The lace forms the puffs on the long sleeves and an inverted V-shaped piece in front. Her hat is a wide black straw one.

Mrs. Joseph L. Hopper, wife of Representative Hopper, has an evening gown of white taffeta combined with black lace. The taffeta forms the molded bodice and the underskirt and the lace is used for the bertha and the full skirt. Mrs. Hopper also has an evening gown beaded all over in tiny beads and the full skirt decorated with hoops of ribbon, very narrow and shirred into shape.

Miss Helen McLanahan, who is to be one of the brides of the summer, looked smart before leaving Washington for her mother's summer place in a sport dress of white silk, made on plain lines with which she wore a wide-brimmed white straw hat.

Gown of White Chiffon.

Miss Helen Clifford, daughter of Col. and Mrs. Edward Clifford, is wearing an evening gown of white chiffon, heavily embroidered at the hem and about the neckline.

Mrs. David H. Blair has a street gown of black satin with bandings of white chiffon. With this she wears a wide brimmed straw hat.

Miss Anne Randolph and Miss Mary Randolph were strolling on Massachusetts avenue early one of the warm evenings in summery gowns of printed silk, made on graceful lines. Miss Anne Randolph wore black with a blue figure and Miss Mary Randolph was in blue, figured in pink. For an afternoon party Miss Anne Randolph wore a gown of henna chiffon, with pleated hanging pieces. Her hat was a wide one of black transparent straw.

Miss Esther Lefevre, who is to be a debutante of the winter, has a smart summer costume of white crepe de chine with which she wears a quilted white coat with a white fur collar.

Miss Barbara Hight, another debutante of next winter, is wearing a dancing frock of pink taffeta made with a molded waistline, and a tulle bertha marking the drop shoulder neckline. Miss Hight has a costume of blue and rose flowered chiffon with which she wears a leghorn hat.

Mrs. Charles McNary, wife of Senator McNary, is wearing a gown of white crepe satin with a white chiffon scarf collar and large white hat.

Americans Enjoy London Season.

Many Americans have been in London this summer enjoying the formal season activities which are coincident to the drawing rooms at the Court of St. James.

Mrs. George Barnett, who has been alternately for the last few weeks between London, Paris and the home of her daughter, Mrs. Robert Dickey, in Pau, France wore at the ball given at the American embassy for the Prince of Wales, a gown of ivory satin embroidered in diamante. With this Mrs. Barnett wore a diamond and emerald girdle, which is the modern version of the old fashion corsage ornaments and ropes of pearls with emerald clasps. She carried a large green fan.

At a luncheon party in London, Mrs. Barnett wore a beige silk costume with a beige straw hat with a beige aigrette, and handsome sable scarf. At the Derby, Mrs. Barnett looked very youthful and attractive in a brown knitted suit and a small close fitting brown hat. She wore over this a sable coat. At the Ascot races the sun smiled on the pretty costumes of the women present, and Mrs. Barnett wore a beige lace dress with a large beige lace hat trimmed with chiffon flowers.

Society Attends Hearings.

The Senate hearings on the Pennsylvania election scandal are attracting many social leaders who follow these Congressional hearings whenever they assume the proportions of real interest. Chief among these "hearings fans" is Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, who takes a keen and understanding interest in the events on Capitol Hill.

Regularly Mrs. Longworth is to be found in her special seat near the newspaper men, which is always reserved for her by the attendants. On Wednesday she was in her place, a picturesque and winsome figure in a summer gown of green figured silk, and white vestee effect. Her hat was a white leghorn turned up in the back and untrimmed save for a band of white silk ribbon. Most of the time she sat with her hat off, as is her custom. The witnesses from Pennsylvania were much interested in her when her identity was learned by them and the word passed quickly among them that "Princess Alice" was in the room.

The modern woman would not make the proverbial good soldier, for just now the spot light of fashion is focused on the backs of gowns, so far as trimmings are concerned. It all began, no doubt, with advancement of the cape dress and the cape-back dress into the forefront of fashion. The long streamers hanging down the back of the wide flopping hat which Miss 1926 wears with such a flapperish dash also played a leading part as well.

It is really going the fad one better to place bows on the backs of slippers and to move rosettes and jewelled buckles from the front to the back. Yet this is exactly what fashionable women are doing. This back trimming of the slippers has to make the wearer look stouter. These graceful wraps have been treated to a little modern invention and are so cleverly constructed that they can be drawn closely about the figure, giving the slenderizing effect of a triangular shawl. In fact, many of the new wraps are simply triangular pieces of material edged with fur or long fringe and draped and molded to the figure by each individual wearer.

With the new idea of special attention to the back of the costume, it is not to be wondered that some of these shawl-like capes are worn just opposite to the way we have always worn such garments, with the pointed triangles hanging down in the front and the ends tied at the back or the side back and allowed to hang down below the waistline.

The ban on alcoholic beverages does not apply to color of materials evidently, for some of the smartest and also most law-abiding citizens have faced the law enforcement officers in absinthe green, the very newest shade, and the still newer "bootleg" reddish brown, with a suspicion of gold tinging it.

Despite the fact that it has not been parasol weather in Washington yet, official diplomatic and resident society are recognizing that an edict has gone forth from the fashion center that the parasol is to come into its own this year.

A COLUMN of frank discussions upon the subject of Fashionable Footwear and Present Day Economics by a recognized authority.

Beyond Sunset Seas!

SHE came to America from Italy with her distinguished husband the Director of The Metropolitan Opera Company of New York. She visited the shops as she had done in Paris, London and other European cities. She bought gowns, hats, shoes. She liked America and especially its shops. One in particular she just will not forget. Twice within the last year she has written from her home across the waters to this shop for footwear.

And Then From Hollywood!

TO Birmingham—The new "iron city of the south" came one of America's foremost feminine screen favorites to film a mighty drama. This lovable and smartly dressed American girl was smitten with the same identical footwear that so charmed her sister from over the seas. And she too must have, not one, but several pairs for herself and as many for her fastidious and altogether charming mother who accompanied her.

Legions La Femme!

THESE are but two of thousands of similar instances where women of good taste and seasoned style-judgment have of their own inclination chosen Nisley's Beautiful Shoes. Not because of their price particularly, but because of their beauty, style-correctness and fitting qualities.

In Every City!

WHERE Nisley's Beautiful Shoes are sold, I could produce a list of the names of hundreds of society leaders and feminine style devotees who wear and enthusiastically endorse Nisley's Beautiful Shoes. The Nisley Company, however, has forbidden me to mention a single name. You have no idea how hard it is upon a writer to be forbidden to mention names.

Sing a Song of Sizes!

"CAN they fit me in December as they do in May?" This is the time of the year when thousands of pairs of shoes are advertised at sale prices with the remote possibility that there is one pair among all of the thousands advertised that will fit your foot.

They Deserve Consideration!

IN the name of economy and because you have that very human feminine quality "to shop and compare" you will attend these sales. But after you have been disappointed a dozen or so times, here is a good thing to "Remember"—Nisley's Beautiful Shoes are carried in a full range of sizes and widths—"Not for just a day—Not for just a week—Not for just a month—But always." And the price too is always $5 with an ever changing assemblage of Seventy Exquisite styles to select from.

Donald, son of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Mac Donald, took place June 19 at 12 o'clock in the apartment of Mrs. Stuart, widow of Col. Edward A. Stuart, U. S. A., the Rev. Edward O. Clark officiating. The ceremony was attended by the members of the two immediate families.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a sleeveless gown of white georgette with lace bertha and basque body with full skirt. She carried a bridal bouquet of white carnations and wore a white picture hat trimmed with lilies of the valley, white roses and lace.

The apartment was decorated in Oriental style, the bridal arch consisting of bamboo trees, sweet peas, lilies, roses and tropical ferns, giving it the harmonious effect of the Philippines.

Following the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served. A saber, an heirloom of the MacDonald family, which was used by the bridegroom's grandfather in the battle of Waterloo in 1815, was used to cut the cake. The bridegroom is a member of the Corcoran Cadet corps of the national guard.

Mr. MacDonald and his bride left later for a wedding trip. They will pass the summer in the Pocono mountains. Mrs. MacDonald's traveling costume was of gray crepe, trimmed in blue, with blue hat. Upon their return they expect to reside in Washington.

Oxfords That Are Comfortable and Good Looking

Many women wonder how a shoe as trim and good looking as the Cantilever Oxford can give such an absolute measure of comfort.

The reasons are simple and logical. The Cantilever Shoe follows the graceful, natural lines of the foot. The shoe is flexible like the foot. This frees the foot and the circulation and permits the foot muscles to strengthen through exercise.

Cantilever support is springy and helpful. The flexible, all-leather arch of the Cantilever is pulled up snugly to the undercurve of the foot by the simple act of lacing the shoe. This gives you the right kind of support,—support without restriction in the

When you walk or work you will enjoy the helpful support and all-day comfort of the Cantilever oxford. For dress wear there is a tempting variety of attractive Cantilever pumps that are both smart and comfortable.

Attractions in the Amusement World

Footlights and Shadows

By JOHN J. DALY

THERE is probably nothing in all the wide, wide world so forlorn as an abandoned theater. Even when a theater is merely vacant, between performances, it has a lost, lonely look. Down on the corner of Little Ninth street and C and Louisiana avenue northwest, just south of Pennsylvania avenue, where the produce merchants hold forth, stands the last vestige of the old Bijou theater. For years nothing has gone on within its walls save the silences of spring and summer, the moaning of winds of winter and rustling of autumn ghosts.

Comes word that interests having to do with automotive lines running from this to other cities are beseeching the commissioners to let them establish in the old Bijou a sort of general all-round terminal for interstate bus traffic; so that if the request goes through, where once held forth the glory of theater there shall be the purring of motors, the hustle and bustle attendant upon hackage.

Of all the old-timers in the city, I wonder how many recall the Bijou when the Bijou was the Bijou; before it reached its present state of dilapidation—when carriages of ladies and gentlemen stopped before its entrance doors to dismiss their charges of the night under glare of the calcium lights, or the old gas jets that once did duty before electricity came into being; just after candle power lost favor with the populace of another day and generation.

Though still young in years, there is no man in this city who knows more about old theater days in Washington than Ed. Walsh, a thespian by nature, star in his own right with every amateur theatrical venture of the late and early nineties, or thereabout; and even he, off-hand, could recall only that, years and years ago, he had seen Edward Arlen, or some such star, strut the boards at the old Bijou. Perhaps some of the real old playgoers of Washington, reading this, may step forward with a word or two that will recall pleasant memories to those who have almost forgotten the Bijou hidden away down there by the market. Certainly none of the youngsters in the city remember the long climb up the old staircase that led to the lobby of the Bijou. Yet, according to Billy Fowler, who for years has been in harness at the National theater, some of the greatest stars in the American theater served their apprenticeship with shows that played the Bijou.

Some years ago, writing an article about old theater days in Washington, I called upon the Hon. William and found him full to the brim with stories of the Bijou. It seems that in his younger days he was an usher there; or, if not an usher, a handy man in the box office. From there he went to Harry Rapley, where he has remained all of 30-odd years.

From Willum at that time I learned that Nat Wills, the comedian, broke into the theatrical game at the old Bijou; that in its heyday the house harbored some of the finest stars on the stage, though in later years it descended to the level of cheap melodrama and, later, low burlesque.

Going on ten years, there has been no theatrical venture of any sort at the Bijou. Its doors were closed some time back.

WASHINGTON theaters have held up pretty well under the strain. The National is undoubtedly the oldest of all, though the Bijou, as a building, out-ages it. Of course, the National has been burned and rebuilt three times, so that in its present form it is practically a new theater; but where the National now stands has been a theater site since the city was a town.

Over on the south side of the Avenue, Poli's stands on the site of the old Albaugh Grand Opera house, which was, after that, Chase's, the forerunner of Keith's at Fifteenth and G streets. In a few more years Poli's, too, will go the way of the Bijou. It stands on ground the government some day will use as a park, part of the mall or a site for a great Federal building.

Across from Lafayette square is the Belasco, which ran many years under the name of the Lafayette. That, as theaters go, is an old-

LON CHANEY BACK AGAIN AT PALACE

A thrilling mystery drama, "The Road to Mandalay," is the latest Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer production which brings Lon Chaney, "the man with 1,000 faces," to Loew's Palace theater for the week beginning this afternoon, supported by a cast that includes Lois Moran, Owen Moore, Henry B. Walthall Kamiyama Sojin, Rose Langdon and John George.

"The Road to Mandalay," which reveals Mr. Chaney in one of the most sinister roles of his entire career, is Tod Browning's production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer of the story by Browning and Herman J. Mankiewics. Laid in the Far East, the abode of mystery and dark deeds, "The Road to Mandalay" offers Chaney the characterization of a man who, evil and scarred by the world, achieves regeneration in a dramatic moment that will mark this production as one of the finest of Chaney's career.

Chaney is first seen as a sea captain whose wife, dying at sea, leaves him a little girl, who is reared by a kindly priest in strict ignorance of her father's identity. In the years that pass her father sinks deeper and deeper into crime until the time comes when he discovers that "the admiral," a renegade young Englishman, who is associated with the seaman in a lot of shady enterprises, is about to marry the latter's daughter, though no more aware than the girl of the seaman's real relationship.

Determined to save the girl from marriage with a rotter, the sinister seaman forces the priest to refuse to marry them and when the girl flees to a questionable resort to find her sweetheart, it is her father who saves her from not only her unworthy lover and an evil Chinaman, but does so at the cost of his own life and the complete wreck of his own enterprises.

The feature will be supplemented with the latest Charlie Chase comedy, "Mum's the Word;" the Pathe Newsreel pictures of world events, Topics of the Day and the usually splendid symphonic embellishment of the Palace Symphony orchestra under the direction of Mr. Thomas J. Gannon.

"SHOW OFF" TO REPEAT AT NATIONAL

Monday night sees one of the most successful plays ever presented by the National Theater Players go into a second week. "The Show-Off," George Kelly's keen and invaluable insight into the frailties

WILDERNESS WOMAN AT THE METRO

A program that combines romance, adventure, humor and music will be presented at Crandall's Metropolitan theater this week, beginning this afternoon at 3 o'clock. The principal screen offering will be First National's picturization of Arthur Stringer's story of "The Wilderness Woman," in which the roles of conspicuous importance are played by Aileen Pringle, Lowell Sherman, Chester Conklin and Robert Cain. The supplementary attractions will embrace a selected first-run comedy of abbreviated length, a new issue of the Metropolitan World Survey and a specially arranged orchestral setting by the Metropolitan Symphony, under the conductorship of Daniel Breeskin, for both feature and short-reels.

The action of "The Wilderness Woman" pursues a course that leads from the snowy fastnesses of the Alaskan woods to the favorite haunts of New York's fashionable rich. The story concerns itself with an American prospector in the far north who finally sells his holdings to a Gotham millionaire for $1,000,000 cash. The first thought of Kadiak MacLean is to get back to a sufficiently civilized community to afford provender other than the pork and beans upon which he has subsisted for a continuous period of 25 years.

Having been completely intrigued by Alan Burkett's vivid descriptions of the sky scrapers, subways and other modern wonders of the metropolis, he decides to take his daughter, Junie, to New York to see the sights. Thrilled at the thought, she replenishes her wardrobe from a Sears-Roebuck catalogue of 1903. Not only that, but she insists on taking her pet grizzly cub to the Biltmore as an honored guest.

From this preliminary situation is derived a succession of amusing and suspenseful episodes in which the city slickers attempt to sell Kadiak the subway, and the polished-lobby wolves seek to despoil the bizarre but wealthy heiress.

The overture for the week will be comprised of melody gems from the late Victor Herbert's operetta, "The Fortune Teller," and the recurrent theme of the interpretative score arranged for the accompaniment of the major feature will be "Love's Awakening," by Fletcher. "The Girl Friend," song hit from the musical comedy of the same name, will enliven the exit.

STAR BILL AT KEITH'S THIS WEEK

POLA NEGRI IS FEATURE AT COLUMBIA

Pola Negri, fascinating Paramount screen star, supported by a cast that includes Tom Moore, Ford Sterling, Miss duPont, Stuart Holmes, Marie Mosquini and Warner Richmond, in "Good and Naughty," a romantic comedy of New York and Palm Beach, is announced as the featured star of the program for the week starting this afternoon at Loew's Columbia theater.

"Good and Naughty" is a picturization for Paramount by Malcolm St. Clair, director of "Are Parents People?" "A Social Celebrity" and other recent hits, including Pola Negri's last starring production, "A Woman of the World," of the famous New York stage play by Avery Hopwood, "Naughty Cinderella." It affords Pola Negri a superb opportunity not only for the exercise of her romantic and emotional talents but for her remarkable comedy touch.

In "Good and Naughty," the star has the role of the smock-clad assistant to a fashionable New York interior decorator who is pressed into service by her employer to portray the part of his fictitious fiancee during a yacht trip to Florida with a young matron whose husband suspects his wife and the interior decorator of a clandestine love affair. The sudden emergence of the assistant into a woman of fashion completely dazzles the yacht's company and not only separates the clandestine lovers, but en-

IRENE RICH IS STAR OF RIALTO FILM

"The Pleasure Buyers," starring Irene Rich, is the feature photoplay at the Rialto, starting today, and is said to be about as exciting a mystery picture as the screen has given us. Adapted from Arthur Somers Roche's magazine story, it preserves the suspense of the original while adding to it an unexpected denouement that will surprise even those who have read the story.

The case concerns the murder of Gene Cassenas, a gay society favorite, who is shot while sitting in his luxurious home at a smart resort. The bullet has come through the

Building in Canada Gains 16 Per Cent

The rapid upward swing of Canadian building activities was indicated in figures made public yesterday showing a 16 per cent gain in May, 1926, permits compared with May, 1925. The figures, covering the 60 leading cities, were compiled by the Dominion bureau of statistics of the department of trade and commerce and contrast with a loss of 3.5 per cent in 484 leading American cities as revealed in the national monthly building survey of S. W. Straus & Co. Canada's May permits totaled $18,513,422, of which $9,500,000 was for 1,950 dwellings.

Since January 1 building permits in the Dominion have totaled $59,753,731, a gain of 19 per cent over the first five months of last year. The average indices of wholesale prices of building materials was 151.1 for the period, the lowest in recent years. Permits issued in the principal cities in May were: Montreal, $2,781,110; Toronto, $2,668,044; Westmount, $1,591,125; Vancouver, $1,534,155; Winnipeg, $1,052,300; Windsor, $971,320; Point Gray, $580,750; Regina, $519,190, and Hamilton, $502,000.

ACTIVITY IN REALTY FOUND LESS IN MAY

Real estate market activity for May showed a recession from the preceding month, according to the index of market activity compiled by the National Association of Real Estate Boards from official records of transfers and conveyances recorded in 41 typical cities.

The index for May stood at 163. This was ten points lower than the index for April of this year, and five points lower than was registered for May of 1925. It is thirteen points higher than the index figure for May of 1924.

The index figure of 163 means that the average number of transfers and conveyances recorded in the cities studied during the month was 63 per cent greater than the average number recorded during the same month in the period 1916-1923, which is the period whose recorded is taken as the norm of the association's calculations.

February marked the peak reached up to the present point in real estate activity during the present year, according to the association's index. The figure for that month was 185, the highest point attained in any month during the years 1916-1926 covered by the association's study.

Sales Heads Discuss Realty Advertising

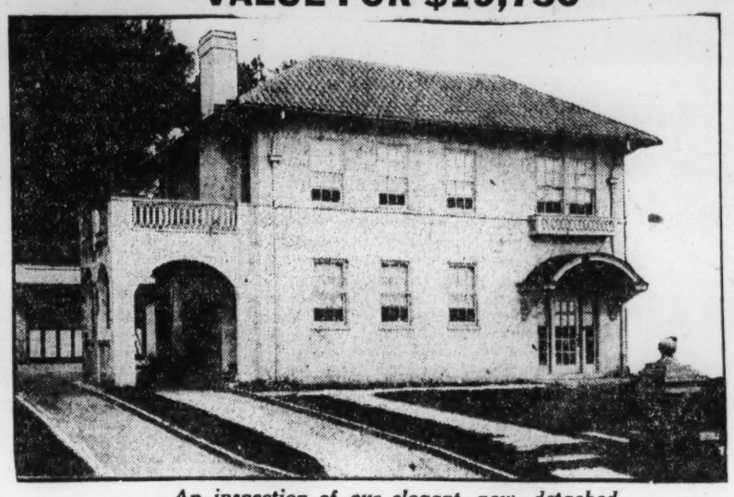

The general betterment of real estate advertising in the National Capital was discussed at a luncheon of the sales managers division of the Washington Real Estate board at the Lee house last week. This division which is composed of the managers and directors of the various sales organizations of the member firms of the board, discussed at length various problems to be dealt with in advertising real estate.

The entire membership of the division was fully agreed that efforts should be made to keep the advertising on an ethical plane and to make it as attractive and representative of the soundess of Washington realty as possible. The meeting was presided over by Charles H. Hillegeist, chairman of the sales managers division.

SHOUTS...The deafening crescendo of an angry roar...April 22, 1889. Thirty thousand of the old West crowded at the edge of Kansas. The vastness of Oklahoma to be thrown open to settlers at high noon...Fretful ponies, the country's finest, milling the prairie dust. Nerves shattered, muscles a-throb with the wait. Restless impatience, ears eager to catch the crack of the Colt—for the greatest horse race ever run...160 acres of Oklahoma homesite the reward of the ones who can fastest race to reach it and stake their claims.

Racing, jamming—for a homesite in a land of uncertain value. And that was just thirty-nine years ago!...Today, in Rock Creek Park Estates, magnificent perfection awaits your Home. It is the District's richest tract, comprising more than 100 acres, truly "a part of the Park." Whispering trees in stately grandeur; sun-patched hills; the charm of pebble-rippled brooks—every guile of Nature is here for you to possess. CAPITAL REALTORS SEE GREAT FUTURE FOR GARRETT PARK

SAY TRANSPORTATION SERVICE IS ADEQUATE

Tract Said to Offer Ideal Suburban Houses With City Convenience.

Activity in the sale of suburban real estate near Washington is best indicated by the rapidity with which the homes in Garrett Park have sold, according to Maddux, Marshall, Moss & Mallory, who developed this community. According to officials of the firm, out of approximately 50 houses built, only eight remain for sale.

"I couldn't even swear that eight remain this afternoon," said J. R. Crutchfield, sales manager for Maddux, Marshall, Moss & Mallory, "as I haven't been in touch with the salesman in charge of that section since yesterday afternoon, and at the rate he has been disposing of them we may not have even eight left.

Transportation Good.

"Some people hesitated to buy in Garrett Park because they thought an automobile was absolutely essential to residence out there. They soon found that there is excellent train service, a good street car line within a reasonable walking distance and now we have hopes of having a bus service, so that the transportation problem will be adequately cared for. Complete market facilities for this community will naturally follow.

"Incidentally, we now have bus service every 30 minutes from Edgemoor and Battery Park to Chevy Chase circle, which adds greatly to the transportation facilities of these two communities. The new service allows the man accustomed to keeping two cars to dispense with one, using the bus for himself and leaving his one car at home for the family use.

"The trend of the center of population is outward from the center of the city, and Montgomery county offers the most logical outlet for the constantly increasing population of Washington. The fact that we have two daily deliveries of mail, all sorts of market facilities and every other convenience enjoyed by the cityy dweller is bringing more and more people to Battery Park and Edgemoor.

"At the rate houses in Garrett Park are going, we hope to finally dispose of our holdings out there within a week, and I will be greatly surprised if the remaining houses last that long, because this is the time when every one's thoughts turn toward the country, or at least toward suburban life, which offers something city life never can."

SOVIET INDUSTRY LEANS TO CAPITALISTIC LINES

Communistic Theories Are Scrapped Often When Faced by Reality.

New York, June 26 (By A. P.).—Soviet Russia is "working hard to reconstruct and develop industry, agriculture, and commerce along largely capitalistic lines," says a report of the Foreign Policy association.

"The soviet authorities have frequently been obliged to scrap their communistic theories when the latter clashed too hashly with economic realities and have made big concessions to capitalistic standards," declares James G. McDonald, chairman. "Some of the more orthodox followers of Marx have occasionally protested violently against these concessions, but in vain."

The growth and security of Russia's foreign trade depends on the rapidity of her economic recovery, Mr. McDonald adds, which in turn depends largely on the extent to which long term credits are made available.

The tendency toward doing business on a capitalist basis "grows stronger day to day," he continues.

"Despite attempts by state competition to break the back of private capitalism in 1925, private enterprise again is enjoying a relatively free hand. Nearly 50 per cent of the retail trade in Russia today is in the hands of private traders. Russian foreign trade, however, is still a government monopoly, though less rigorous."

NEW YORK IS GRANTED MOST BUILDING PERMITS

MATERIALS' COSTS DROP

The twelve States which reported to S. W. Straus & Co. the largest volume of building permits for the month of May, 1926, were:

	No. of Places.	Volume of Permits.
New York	40	$107,905,185
Illinois	20	40,695,702
California	55	28,630,761
Michigan	16	25,256,842
Pennsylvania	19	21,561,257
Ohio	28	19,947,187
Florida	61	18,831,006
New Jersey	29	16,414,598
Massachusetts	27	13,519,453
Texas	18	12,919,196
Indiana	17	8,743,075
Wisconsin	13	7,668,245

The building material situation in May differed little from that of April. The downward trend of material prices was still evident, although not any more pronounced than during the preceding month. The prices of starting materials remained unchanged. Boston reported a slight decline in the Portland cement and lime quotations, while lime prices also declined at St. Louis and Dallas. Brick continued firm with slight increases in Boston and Dallas. Two materials that have been on the decline since the beginning of the year are linseed oil and lumber. Douglas Fir particularly was weak, but even a number of Southern Pine items reported declines.

The structural steel market in the early weeks of May was quite active, but it suffered a relapse in the last week of the month. In addition to large commercial buildings, much of the demand for structural steel came for bridges, viaducts, and similar operations. Especially was the activity strong in New York and Chicago. The mill prices remained firm, but the fabricators did not maintain their quotations, frequently granting concessions, especially in Boston, Philadelphia and Cleveland. An advance of $2 a ton in the price of steel bars about the middle of May is expected to influence the price of structural shapes, but this is not looked forward to until the third quarter.

The labor situation underwent no particular changes and conditions generally are tranquil. A firm tendency toward higher wages, however, was in evidence in many important centers.

SKETCH OF CARPENTERS' BUILDING

Architect's sketch showing new eight-story modern office building being erected on the northwest corner of Tenth and K streets northwest by the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, Local No. 132. The ground was purchased from Oxenberg and Levanthal through the office of O. B. Zantzinger. James L. Parsons, jr., is the builder and O. Harvey Miller is the architect.

CARPENTERS ERECTING $250,000 STRUCTURE

Building, to Be Situated in K Street, to Contain Offices for Union.

Construction work is now going forward rapidly on the erection of the $250,000 modern, fireproof eight-story office building to be erected on the northwest corner of Tenth and K streets northwest by the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, local No. 132. The old residence formerly on the property has been razed. Ground for the project was purchased from Oxenberg & Levanthal through the office of O. B. Zantzinger.

The structure will be known as the Carpenters Office building. It will have a frontage of 50 feet on K street and 100 feet on Tenth street. There will be six stores on the ground floor, in addition to the union's main office. The next six stories will be devoted to offices, and the top floor will be an assembly room for the union, with basement under the entire building. There will be two high-speed A. B. See elevators, drinking fountains and all other equipment that goes to make a modern office building.

All the interior stairs and elevators will be of the inclosed type to prevent fire from spreading from one floor to the other. The windows along the party line, open court and alley will be of metal and wired glass fireproof type. The exterior will be of granite, carved Indiana limestone and brick, with the details designed in the Italian renaissance style.

The general contract has been awarded to James L. Parsons, jr., and the architect is O. Harvey Miller.

UNIFORM MORTGAGE PLAN BEING PUSHED BY REALTY BOARDS

Borrower Declared to Pay for Present Cumbersome and Diverse Laws.

BAR ASSOCIATION ASKED TO PASS ON MEASURE

Supply of Capital Between States Would Be Made More Liquid.

Holding that in the long run it is the borrower who pays for the present cumbersome and diverse systems of mortgage foreclosure in the several States, the National Association of Real Estate Boards has again taken a stand for the passage of a uniform mortgage act.

The association, in resolutions adopted at its annual convention just closed at Tulsa, Okla., indorses specifically the tentative uniform mortgage act which has been framed by the national conference of commissioners on uniform State laws and urges that the conference, having drafted the act, now give the present form its official indorsement. It also calls on the American Bar association to take a stand in regard to the measure as drafted.

Adoption of a uniform act would aid greatly in making clear the title to real property and would produce uniformity of law for the large interstate dealings in mortgages, it is pointed out.

Association's Statement.

The association's statement is as follows:

"Whereas the National Association of Real Estate Boards has a peculiar interest in the uniformity of laws throughout the country affecting the transfer of real estate; and

"Whereas the national association has regarded as of peculiar importance the early passage of a uniform mortgage act in order to standardize the foreclosure of mortgages and make the supply of capital between States more liquid; and

"Whereas the National Association of Real Estate Boards has in the past cooperated with the national conference of commissioners on uniform State laws and the American Bar association in an endeavor to have such an act formulated; and

"Whereas the National Association of Real Estate Boards has refrained itself from drafting and promoting such a uniform act pending the consideration by the national conference of commissioners on uniform State laws and the American Bar association;

"Now, therefore, be it resolved by the National Association of Real Estate Boards in convention assembled this 10th day of June, 1926, That it regrets the failure of the national conference of commissioners on uniform State laws at its last meeting to finally adopt the uniform mortgage act which it has been engaged in framing for the past five years and hopes it will do so at an early date. The act has the general approval of the real estate and mortgage interests and experts in mortgage law.

Foreclosure Simplified.

"The act simplifies mortgages and their foreclosure and makes clear titles to real estate; and its general adoption by the States would produce uniformity of law for the large interstate dealings in mortgages in place of the present great diversity of law. The act provides a standard, simple, short form of mortgage, the long equivalent of which is set forth in the act to give protection to the parties. A standard short form would greatly facilitate and economize the giving, recording and transfer of mortgages, as proved by the experience of States where it is now used.

"The act provides a simple method of foreclosure by power of sale so regulated as to afford proper protection for all parties, including a redemption period. Foreclosure is made less expensive and more certain as compared with the diverse, cumbersome and costly foreclosure proceedings now in use generally in the States. The lender is given better security, while the borrower is protected, thus greatly aiding the loaning of money on real estate. In the long run the borrower pays for the present useless large expense of foreclosure.

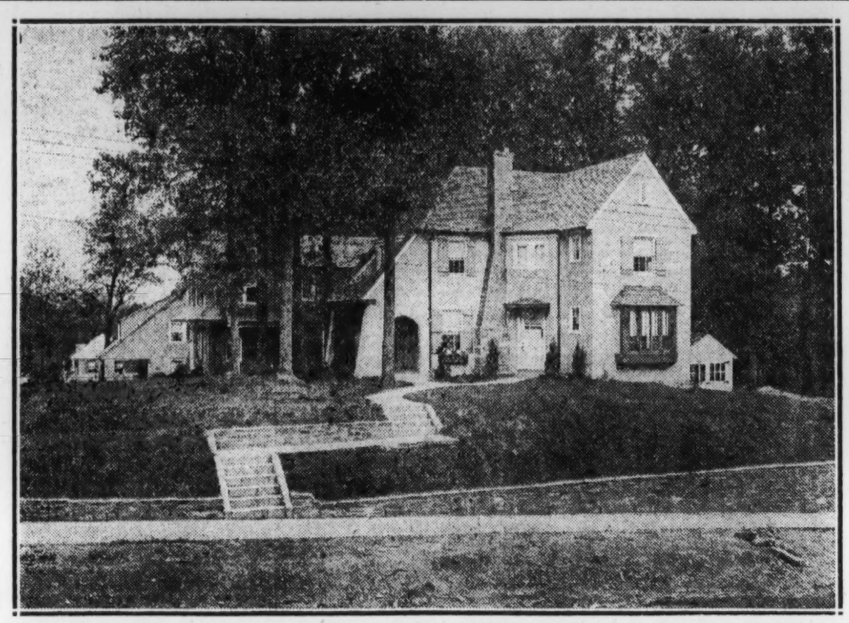

"The act provides statutes of limitations which effectively outlaw old mortgages of record and not extended, and which give good titles after foreclosure, thus aiding greatly in making clear titles to land.

Bar Urged to Act.

"This association has long felt the great need of reform in mortgage law in this country, and has recognized the benefits which would flow from its uniformity. We have realized that the preparation of a uniform mortgage act was a matter peculiarly for the national conference on uniform State laws, and it was originally at our suggestion, made through our general counsel, that this work was undertaken by our national conference. We like to feel that we were its moving cause. We appreciate the great value of the work the national conference has done in framing such an act which has had our support. But those interested and who would benefit from it are entitled to the official approval of the national conference and of the bar association. We heartily indorse the uniform mortgage act in its tentative form, and urge its official indorsement in its present form by the national conference and the American Bar association, and

"Be it further resolved: That the National Association of Real Estate Boards expresses its appreciation to the national conference commissioners on uniform State laws for its consideration of the simplification, and the making more uniform of other matters concerning the transfer of and title to real estate, and expresses the hope that from time to time additional acts may be offered intended to accomplish this purpose."

HOME—that's what you'll find here. HOME in every sense. The sort of a home you'll just naturally take to—because it is probably just the kind of a home that has been uppermost in your dreams.

These homes were built by Robert Munro—one of Washington's oldest, most reliable and conscientious operators. He left nothing undone to insure their perfection. How well he succeeded you will notice as you inspect the sample house—as you go from room to room. They are built as though he intended living in every one of them HIMSELF.

The very finest of materials. The most skillful workmanship. The greatest of care in planning—so that your every desire would be completely satisfied.

These are homes of extraordinary refinement—UNUSUAL in many respects. They are regarded by those who KNOW real estate values as unusual opportunities. The price is RIGHT. The location couldn't possibly be better. They are situated in a spot of rare beauty—and where Summer is almost unknown.

There are only a few. And, undoubtedly, as soon as home-seekers see them they will be literally "grabbed up." Homes like these are much sought after by folks who want a REAL HOME. The price? Very attractive. The terms? Within your reach. We urge prompt inspection—because you really don't want to miss such an opportunity—and at the price asked—this IS an opportunity.

KIEL NAVAL BASE EMPTY, IN CONTRAST TO DAYS OF KAISER

PRINCE HENRY CHANGED; ATTITUDE IS BITTER

Kiel, Germany, June 26 (By A. P.).—Nowhere would the kaiser, were he to return to his country, find a more poignant contrast between the present and the past than in Kiel.

William II was the creator of this powerful naval fastness, with its huge docks and all the apparatus of shipbuilding and repair. He was the builder of the formidable fortifications defending the sea approaches. This was the scene of some of his great moments when as commander-in-chief of the fleet he steamed into the harbor as rounds of salutes poured from dozens of guns.

Today the harbor looks empty. The forts are partly dismantled. The naval academy is closed. The castle in which Prince Henry, the kaiser's brother, lived is an office building. The yacht club house, presented by the elder Krupp, is now a scientific institute. It was there the kaiser, surrounded by his admirals and generals, made many an utterance that caused flutters in foreign chancelleries. Everywhere are suggestions of decay and neglect and change.

Kaiser's Last Visit.

The kaiser has not been here since that afternoon of June 28, 1914, when he was occupied with arrangements respecting the regatta. An aid delivered a dispatch, saying that Archduke Franz Ferdinand and his wife had been assassinated at Sarajevo.

"Now, I must do everything over again," were the emperor's first words. Flags were ordered half mast. He terminated the regatta, sent messages to Winston Churchill who was on an English boat in the harbor, to the Prince of Monaco on his yacht and to others invited to dinner that evening, composed a telegram to Franz Joseph, and took a special train for Berlin.

Prince Henry comes to Kiel occasionally but not often since he left it in a closed automobile flying a red flag when the revolution broke here in the early days of November, 1918. This manner of leaving is the subject of adverse gossip among the townspeople. They say also that his democratic manner which made him a popular personage has changed; that he is now distant, brusque, somewhat bitter in speech.

Sailor-Prince a Farmer.

The prince lives on hsi estate, Hemmelsmark near Eckenfoerde, not far from Kiel. The sailor-prince has become greatly interested in his farming and stock raising and shows his visitors fine cattle with as much pleasure as he formerly took in the equipment of his flagship.

The war appears to have placed the United States rather outside the prince's sympathies. An American yachtsman living in Hamburg, who is a member of the Hansa Yacht club, after the treaty of peace between Germany and America was signed, flew the American flag above the Hansa-pennant having first obtained a letter of assent from the club's secretary. Prince Henry was displeased and some of the club members questioned the propriety. The American explained that although the club authorities had approved of the American flag, he would remove the Hansa pennant and hoist that of the Royal Danish club of which he also was a member. That he did.

Auto Makers Annoyed.

Representatives of American automobile companies, members of the Hamburg Automobile club, were a little annoyed over the prince's insistence in his speech at the opening of the new clubhouse, that good Germans should not buy foreign cars; that the money went out of the country and that German cars were all right.

The prince at one time drove an American car.

However, the prince is described as having the most agreeable recollections of his American experiences, of his cordial receptions, and of the successful political effect, as he believed, of his mission.

Nine Are Admitted Into Harding Camp

Lieut. Col. J. Franklin Bell, engineer commissioner of the District, and Maj. U. S. Grant 3d, director of public buildings and public grounds, were among nine candidates admitted into membership of Warren G. Harding camp, No. 3, Sons of Union Veterans of the civil war, at a meeting on June 16 in Grand Army hall.

Others admitted as members were Judge O. P. Brown, of the United States Shipping Board; A. P. Carson, Harry W. Perrin, John A. McAneny, Eugene Ohlander, Robert J. F. McElroy, and J. A. P. Farnham. These men represented seven States and many professions and government offices. The degree team was in charge of Dr. A. A. Taylor, Department Commander Dr. T. G. Pettys, and Col. John McElroy. Assistant Adj. Gen. Godfrey, Past Department Commander Moulton, Col. O. H. Oldroyd, and Post Commander Dunbar, of Burnside post, delivered addresses.

Since the opening of this tract of more than 100 acres, adjoining Rock Creek park, there has been considerable activity both in the purchase of homesites and in the improvements of the estates as a whole.

The new company has for its purpose the development of the estates, architecturally and scenically, along the most approved lines to assure home owners here the finest of environment. The company's activities primarily include cooperation with purchasers in the construction of highest type homes. Close affiliation with prominent architects, construction specialists and sources of supply provides facilities of the most helpful nature.

"The buyer of a homesite in Rock Creek Park Estates," said Mr. Briggs, "naturally intends building a home which will harmonize in beauty and individuality with the lovely surroundings. To accomplish this most successfully, and at reasonable cost, the new company has been formed."

The Briggs Construction Co., in addition to its services of consultation, suggestion and construction supervision to home builders in the Estates, will also assist in financing the homes when desired. Operations will include the installation of excellent roads, sidewalks and general direction of the development, to preserve and enhance the natural beauty of the tract. The company is ready to give the maximum service; road-building equipment has been purchased, and is now busily perfecting the Estates' system of winding roads.

While the primary purpose of the Briggs Construction Co. is the highest grade development of Rock Park Estates, its services will be available for better class home construction in any part of Washington where the home owner desires planning, construction and landscaping of an excellence similar to that which will distinguish Rock Creek Park Estate homes.

BAY RIDGE ESTATES PLANS YACHT CLUB ON LAKE OGLETON

Institution Primarily Is for Residents Interested in Water Sports.

COLONIAL BUILDING TO BE CONSTRUCTED

Of greatest interest to the business and professional men of the Washington-Baltimore area is announcement of the formation of the Bay Ridge Yacht and Country club at Bay Ridge estates on Chesapeake bay, with which many prominent business men of both cities have already become indentified, and which promises to develop into an institution supplying a long-felt need in these centers for a club dedicated to yachting and other water sports.

The club roster is now being drawn up by a membership committee headed by A. B. Flagg, of Chicago, and many prominent Washington, Baltimore and Annapolis citizens have become members. Among those interested in the new organization are Harry Karr, attorney of Baltimore; Roe Fulkerson, of Washington; Charles P. Neill, head of the bureau of information of Southern Railway of Washington; Thomas R. Bond, of Baltimore, and James A. Walton, president of the Annapolis Banking & Trust Co., of Annapolis.

Social Activities Planned.

While primarily an institution for those interested in yachting and other water sports, the Bay Ridge Yacht and Country club offers members an excellent opportunity for fishing bathing, swimming, tennis, and other outdoor sports, while the usual social activities of the country club life will be enjoyed in the club house.

The clubhouse will be located on the banks of Lake Ogleton, a salt-water lake, fringed in heavy woodland, and with a dredged channel to the bay, admitting passage of yachts and other pleasure craft for safe anchorage.

Modern Building in View.

The building will be in the Georgian or colonial type of architecture, with wide porches overlooking the lake and bay. It will contain locker rooms, lounges, dining room, guest chambers and out-door dancing space. Members are planning for annual regattas and boat races, as well as other water contests, during the club year.

The clubhouse will be located in a spot readily accessible from Washington, Baltimore and Annapolis. With completion of Defense highway, Bay Ridge will be but 28 miles from Washington, over paved roads. At present it is an hour's motor ride from both Washington and Baltimore and 3.3 miles from Annapolis.

AT THE CHESS TABLE

By WILLARD H. MUTCHLER.

District Champion I. S. Turover gave an impressive exhibition of simultaneous chess play at the rooms of the Capital City Chess club Saturday. The results indicate that in spite of three years of comparative inactivity he still stands as the peer of all local players. Encountering 21 opponents he emerged with the loss of but a single game, while five of his adversaries managed to escape with draws. The remaining 15 games he scored handily, finishing off several in brilliant combinational fashion.

Zest was added to the entertainment by Turover's announcement that he would distribute two prizes, a year's subscription to the American Chess Bulletin in each case, to the two players contesting the most theoretically sound games against him regardless of the outcome. C. A. Hesse and W. K. Wimsatt, jr., both of whom drew their games, were awarded the prizes, the former taking proper steps against a theoretically unsound defense to the center counter gambit, which Turover himself adopted. The remaining three draws were achieved by C. C. Bettinger, T. J. Buford and W. G. Ware.

G. E. Bishop, the only player to defeat the champion, obtained a slight material advantage through a probable oversight of the single player. Once the advantage was obtained, however, he forced the end in masterly style.

The audiene applauded Turover at the conclusion of the last game. It is to be hoped that they will see the champion in action again before another three-year period has elapsed. A summary of the score, and a few of the games including those which won the prizes, are appended.

Tournament Play.

The Kriegspiel tournament at the Capital City Chess club is getting rapidly under way. In the games played during the past week Fox and Bishop both showed to advantage. Under the rules governing play each entrant contests two games with every other entrant. As explained before, neither player is permitted to see his opponent's position, a referee keeping track of the moves on a separate board.

Fox won from Badger 2—0, from Mutchler 1—0, from Roberts 1—0, and split with Bishop 1—1. Bishop defeated Mutchler 2—0 and Pasch 2—0. He ended even with Bettinger 1—1. An amusing game which he won, the shortest in the tourney, is given. Bettinger and Mutchler divided 1—1. Roberts won from Zatz 1—0 and Fuller from Bishop by the same score. The standing of the players is appended.

What Do You Call It?

A Canape

You or I would call it a sofa—and so, of course, it is, but this particular graceful kind of sofa is the sort that came into vogue in France during the last years of the sixteenth century. Sometimes it seats four people, sometimes six—which doesn't indicate crowding but extension of the ground plan.

The word "sofa" itself is of Turkish origin. The true sofa was the rug-covered dais on which the grand vizier sat cross-legged while holding audience.

G. U. LAW CLASSES INCREASE EXPECTED WITH 1926-27 TERM

Communications Received From Prospective Students Indicate Growth.

EUCHARISTIC CONGRESS DELEGATES ARE BACK

Students of Foreign Service School Are Preparing to Study Abroad.

That the two incoming classes at Georgetown university law school next fall will be as large, if not larger, than the 1925-26 classes, despite the fact that entrance requirements have been tightened, is indicated from the increased communications that are being received from prospective students all over the country.

For many years, until recently, the Georgetown law enrollment was the largest in the United States. By requiring two years of college work for admission, with a result that it has been given a class A grading by the American Bar association, the enrollment naturally fell off considerably. Last season's student body, however, was in excess of 1,000 members and the prospects are excellent for an even larger enrollment when the school opens September 15.

Recitation Facilities Limited.

While facilities are limited in the way of recitation halls, the school authorities are confident of being able to cope with the situation. Most of the "overflow" can be taken care of by the morning classes, which are increasing in popularity, but the evening classes, as usual, will comprise the majority of the student body. Several new courses, it was indicated, would be incorporated in the curriculum next fall and steps will be taken this summer to fill any possible vacancies on the faculty, which is now the largest in the city.

The evening classes are arranged so as to enable students to be employed in the day, while the morning classes meet at 9 o'clock. Although inaugurated only three years ago, the morning classes have shown a steady growth.

Back From Eucharistic Congress.

With the close of the Eucharistic congress in Chicago, Georgetown's representatives have returned, after having taken an active and prominent part in affairs of this great religious gathering. Considerable interest was manifested by foreign delegates when they learned that Georgetown was the first Catholic institution of higher learning established in the United States.

The Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, S. J., regent of the foreign service school, who is known to Catholics throughout Europe, conveyed to the congress felicitations from the Rev. Charles W. Lyons, S. J., president of the university. Others from Georgetown who took part in the proceedings were the Rev. Walter G. Summers, S. J., regent of the medical and dental departments, and Rear Admiral William S. Benson, of the United States Shipping Board, who for years has been a leading spirit in Georgetown affairs.

In addition a committee of college undergraduates, headed by Philip D. Dean, '27, presented a testimonial plaque to Cardinal Mundelein. Others on the committee were Edward Bremner, '27; Martin J. Harding, '27; William Powell, '29; William Lawler, '28, and Joseph Griffin, '28.

Students Arrange Foreign Trips.

Many students of the foreign service school are making arrangements through the school authorities for trips abroad during the summer. Some of these trips will be undertaken for the purpose of attending European universities, while others will be primarily for investigation purposes.

Though full data are not available at present, members of Delta Sigma Pi announce that at least eight of their number are making arrangements to go abroad to study in European universities. It is expected that a part of them will go to the University of Berlin for the summer school. A number of Georgetown students will ship as pursers or as ordinary seamen in order to visit as many ports as possible where they can study shipping and port facilities.

Officials of the school give every possible encouragement to students to use their summers in getting this practical experience in foreign countries. Generally arrangements are made so that the men get at least as much credit as they would get if they took ordinary university courses during the summer in the United States. In addition to getting certificates from universities that they attend abroad, or from countries with which they work in an official capacity, each man is required to hand in a thesis covering some phase of his investigations and research work during the summer.

LEWIS PUPILS PLAN FOR DEMONSTRATION

Will Show How Hotel Is Operated at School Tonight.

A committee of four students selected from class 23 of the Lewis Hotel Training school are working out a practical demonstration on front-office operation. They will turn the school building at Twenty-third street and Pennsylvania avenue into a hotel tomorrow evening.

The duties of assigning rooms, racking up names and giving out keys to other students who will arrive with baggage and ask for accommodations will be performed by pupils. Student "bellboys" will assist with hand luggage, while "porters" will handle all trunks. Upstairs the "inspectress" will supervise the making of beds and the "housekeeper" will notify the front office when rooms are "in order."

Pistol Is Replacing Rifle in Coast Units

Gradually the shoulder-rifle is being displaced by the pistol in various coast artillery units. The War Department just has approved recent recommendations of Maj. Gen. Andrew Hero, jr., chief of coast artillery, that the pistol shall take the place of the rifle as an article of equipment for all enlisted men of the railway artillery organizations.

Men of the antiaircraft, tractor-drawn, and sound-ranging units of the corps already are equipped with the pistol. All men of the harbor-defense units, except the bands, and men of the first three grades still are equipped with the rifle.

FACULTY AT G. W. U. ENLARGED; COURSES FOR FALL ARE ADDED

Public Health, Social Service and Vocational Guidance Lecturers Named.

DR. WILLIAM M. LEWIS TO ADDRESS EDUCATORS

Bishop of London to Visit School and Address Students October 29.

Additional faculty appointments in various departments of George Washington university are announced.

Dean William C. Ruediger, of Teachers college, has named Dr. James Frederick Rogers, chief of the division of school hygiene and physical education, a lecturer in public health, to give courses of special value to social workers. Helen D. Pigeon, associate secretary of the International Association of Policewomen, has been appointed lecturer in social service.

Dr. Rogers has been an officer in the public health service, medical inspector of schools of New Haven, Conn., and a teacher in Temple college and the New Haven Normal school. Miss Pigeon is a Radcliffe graduate and an active worker for several years in social service.

Vocational Guidance Lecturer.

The appointment of Ira D. Scott as lecturer in vocational guidance is announced by Dr. Ruediger. The work is considered of great assistance to teachers in junior and senior high schools, and has been developed in an informal way in all high schools where teachers have committees on work of that type. The demand for this work has been made by Washington school teachers. Dr. Scott has had extensive experience in applied psychology, personnel work and vocational guidance, especially in connection with disabled soldiers for the last few years.

Dean William C. Van Vleck, of the law school, announced appointment of William Thomas Fryer as assistant professor of law. He is a graduate of George Washington university, in both the college and law departments, and a graduate of the Yale university graduate school of law, receiving the degree of doctor of jurisprudence cum laude. He has been a practicing lawyer in Baltimore.

Clarence M. Updegraff, professor of law, has resigned to accept the call at Iowa university, his alma mater. He will leave for work there this fall.

Engineering Professor Named.

Prof. John R. Lapham, who will become dean of the engineering college in the fall to take place of Dean Hugh Miller, who goes to Union college, New York, N. Y., announces appointment of Frank H. Hitchcock as professor of civil engineering. The new professor is a graduate of Cornell university. He has taught at Cornell, at Roberts college, Constantinople, Turkey, and at the New Mexico State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts. He has been connected with the bureau of standards as chief of the division dealing with cement and concrete experiments and has written extensively on these subjects.

Tonight, in Philadelphia, at the sesquicentennial, Dr. William Mather Lewis will deliver the opening address to the teachers of the National Education association assembled on the square of Independence hall. Dr. Lewis will also speak Tuesday at Bedford Springs, Pa., at the meeting of the Philadelphia Bar association.

Dr. Ruediger will go to Ithaca, N. Y., to teach at Cornell university this summer. He is motoring through and will stop off with his family at the National Education association meeting in Philadelphia.

The university was grieved at the loss of Col. Archibald Hopkins, vice chairman of the board of trustees, who died last week. Col. Hopkins was an untiring worker in the interests of the institution and had been connected with the board many years.

Bishop of London Coming.

The visit of the bishop of London to the university, scheduled for October 29, is expected to draw a large crowd of students. Word has been received at the university that the visit is definitely set for that date at which time a delegation of students will attend a meeting at which he will speak.

Additional funds have been received by the university during the last week for the third unit. The trustees are actively appealing to friends of the institution for funds with which to start erection of the new building. It is expetced that work will be started some time during the summer.

Work in the summer school continues with most gratifying results. The six weeks' session of the department of arts and sciences begins July 6. It is expected that many additional students, many of whom are taking work now, will continue and that a number of more mature persons will register for work during that period.

Curley Scholarships Awarded to Boy, 13

William Ralph Freund, 13 years old, a pupil at St. Patrick's academy, has been awarded the Archbishop Curley scholarship as a result of competitive examinations held recently, it was announced last night.

Freund is the son of Mrs. W. J. Freund, 932 I street northwest. Under the terms of the scholarship he will enter St. John's college next fall and will be entitled to four years' tuition without charge. Freund was also the winner of the Whitton-Stafford gold prize for general excellence in scholarship.

ARE YOU THE GIRL WITH AUBURN HAIR?

By VIOLA PARIS.

If you're the girl whose hair is red-brown, red-gold, or frankly, gorgeously, unadulteratedly red, you may thank your stars that you were born in a day and age that appreciates you. For once upon a time you would have been called "Carrots," and nobody would have thought of making a heroine of you. Today, when you see a red-haired girl in a book you feel sure that she'll get the hero in the end. Lucky red-head!

Two Types of Red-Heads.

But there are two distinct types of red-haired girls, and they can't treat themselves as though they were each other. There's the red-haired girl who is virtually a blonde—a blonde with a match set to her. She has blue eyes, or—even lovelier—green eyes; her hair is red-gold; her skin is apt to be perfectly pink and white or dusted with little freckles. (Don't let her worry over these, by the way, if they're just a golden, piquant powdering across the bridge of her nose. If they're so many that they threaten to swallow her face, she must use a stiff bleach treatment.)

Some of these blonde red-heads have, alas, white eyelashes. They must help Nature out with brown mascara, skillfully applied, but they mustn't ever bead their lashes, because a red-haired girl so easily looks theatrically overdone, if she isn't careful. The second type of red-haired girl is the one whose hair verges on the brown generally with red-brown eyes to match, or those of lighter hazel. She is the brunette version of the red-haired clan and is never troubled with white lashes—seldom, indeed, with freckles—which is some consolation for not being as startling as her red-blonde rival.

Make-up for the Red-Haired.

Both of the red-haired types must be very careful in the matter of make-up. Both may make up their lips, but both must avoid any lipstick that verges on the purple, or the too bright rose. The orange or scarlet sticks are the only ones that won't fight with their hair.

The blonde red-head is often better without rouge on her cheeks. Her blue eyes and her flaming hair are better set off by pallor. But the brunette red-head generally needs a bit of flush in her face; only, here again, she must use orange rather than rose. The red-blonde may choose peach, naturelle, or her own pet mixture of blonde powders as a true blonde would do, with lavender as a change-off or the evening lights; but the red-brunette will generally find her affinity in rachel, with yellow at night.

There seems to be no rule as to whether red-haired women should wear their hair waved or straight, so let each make her choice. The only other problem relating to the hair itself concerns its darkening, and here a rinse with camomile tea is harmless and beneficial.

Perfumes That Will Appeal.

Exotic perfumes, rather orientalized, are very good for so challenging and unusual a type as either of the red-haired versions we've been talking of. Lotus, amber, chypre, jasmin, are very much better than the straight flower fragrances, especially those like white rose, lily-of-the-valley and the carnation, which are quite too ingenuous.

Jewelry, for the auburn-haired, should follow directions for blondes and brunettes, respectively, given a few weeks ago. The red-brunette may wear semiprecious, exotic things, especially those that are rich colored and opaque. The red-blonde looks wonderful with crystals, emeralds, aquamarines and other translucent stones, though she should carefully avoid any suggestion of overdoing her decorative scheme.

Which Colors Are Good?

Greens, of course, were simply made for red-haired people, the precise shade depending on the shade of the hair. Tawny tones of brown that verge on the reddish are wonderful—true, warm autumn browns. Dead-leaf browns and African browns are bad. Beiges, of course, are good, but not those that are too pink. Dark reds are possible, but must be tried out carefully, as they depend entirely on the shade of the hair. Clear blues, bright blues, are good for the blue-eyed red-head, but not for her brunette sister. Almost all red-haired women look divine in white at night and in black by day. Black-and-white—very smart at present—is something that the vivid blonde red-head wears particularly well.

Girls Friendly Society

Rev. F. Bland Tucker, rector of St. John's church, Georgetown, will have the service at the Eleanor Lewis Memorial chapel at the Holiday house, at 5 o'clock this afternoon.

"Candidates' Week" at Holiday house began yesterday afternoon when 25 girls from Epiphany chapel with Miss Mary Boyden and a group from Resurrection chapel with Mrs. Gilchrist arrived for a week's stay in the country. Besides the swings and seesaws that were put up last year on the children's playground, a new croquet set and some quoits were added a few days ago, the games being purchased with a fund made up of contributions from the various candidates' classes. Next week children from the classes of the chapel of the Annunciation, St. John's church, Georgetown, and St. Marks' church will have their turn at Holiday house.

A lawn fete will be given Wednesday evening at the Diocesan house, 1329 K street, by the G. F. S. senior club, beginning at 6 o'clock. Miss Helen Hayes will be in charge of the cake table and Miss Mary Sensel the fancy table. Ice cream will be sold by Mrs. A. B. Norton, Miss Catherine Burgess, Mrs. Williams M. King. Miss Mary Flaharty will sell punch. The grab bag will be in charge of Mrs. M. B. Snyder, and Miss Virginia Thomas will preside at the candy table.

Miss Ruth Long has arrived at Holiday house from Hartford, Conn., and will have charge of recreation.

The branch from the Church of the Ascension went on a picnic Friday evening to the Normal camp on the Potomac river near Glen Echo. Miss Edwina Rucker, branch president, was in charge.

Fifteen children attended the Sunday school last Sunday morning at the Eleanor Lewis Memorial chapel. Miss Frances Crown is in charge and the other teachers are Mrs. Finch, Miss Caroline Kroiter and Miss Frances Finch.

The branch at Christ church, Rockville, Md., has begun work on articles for the annual Christmas sale and also on "cheer bags" for the Red Cross for soldiers who are away from home on Christmas. Miss Loretta Hunter was elected the best "friendly girl" for the year in the branch and awarded a week at the Holiday house as a prize. Miss Martha Williams was one of the two delegates representing the diocese of Washington at the Maryland members' conference recently held at the Holiday house at Sewell, Md.

A meeting of the G. F. S. Senior club was held Thursday evening at the apartment of Mrs. W. E. Bolens, 1515 Rhode Island avenue northeast. Miss Helen Mulliken, the newly appointed vice president of the club, was formally introduced to the 22 girls present. It was decided to send two candidates to Holiday house. Arrangements for the lawn fete were concluded. Later a surprise birthday party with a candle-lighted cake and ice cream was held for Miss Beatrice Morgan, a member of the club.

The Young Women's Christian association is acting as one of the hostess organizations at the sesquicentennial exposition in Philadelphia. It is occupying Mount Vernon house, an exact replica of George Washington's home, located on the corner of Broad street and Pattison avenue.

The porches and most of the ground floor of Mount Vernon house are to be converted into a cafeteria, with a seating capacity of 300. An information desk is being arranged where visitors can find out all about the sesquicentennial; can inquire for places in which to live while in Philadelphia, either under the auspices of the Y. W. C. A. or in investigated rooms listed in the rooms registry, or can seek aid and advice in any emergency which may develop. Secretaries from the International institute will be in attendance to give specialized help to foreign visitors.

The lord mayor of London and his wife will receive the Y. W. C. A delegates at Mansion house tomorrow afternoon. The occasion will be one of the events of the biennial conference of the Young Women's Christian association of Great Britain. Today at Westminister Abbey a special service for the conference visitors will be held. It has been arranged through the courtesy of the Dean of Westminster.

Mrs. Elaine L. Rising, hostess at Vacation lodge, Cherrydale, Va., reports some vacancies in double rooms, as well as sleeping porch accommodations. The lodge serves both as a summer residence for business girls of Washington and a vacation center for short and long periods. Reservations are made at the Administration building, 614 E street northwest.

At the lodge house committee meeting last week it was decided to hold Sunday services this year at 8 o'clock in the evening. Miss Frances Daugherty will be in charge of the service today. A course in nature study will be given again, under the direction of Mrs. Rising, assisted by Miss Maud Thompson.

Kamp Kahlert, on West river, Md., opened yesterday for the summer vacation period with a registration of 47 juniors and 11 senior week-end guests. The bus trip of one and a half hours was chaperoned by a Y. W. C. A. secretary. Miss Jane E. Blinn, secretary of membership and recreation, will serve as a senior counselor at camp for the next three weeks. Miss Mabel Cook, girl reserve secretary, is in charge of the junior program. Miss Saida L. Hartman, industrial secretary, is also assisting at camp. Miss M. Florence Dunlap is director.

Miss Ruth A. Walton, director of swimming, announced a new summer schedule for the pool at 614 E street. Three additional 40-minute dip periods have been added on Mondays between 2 and 4; and one additional period on Tuesdays from 3:20 to 4; Wednesdays, 6:20 to 7; Thursdays, 3:20 to 4, and Saturdays, 3 to 3:40.

A medical examination by the association physician is required of every one who wishes to use the pool. Appointment can be arranged for Tuesday and Thursday nights between 7 and 9 by calling the information desk, 614 E street. Cards giving the new schedule are ready for distribution at the information desk.

Mrs. Fred E. Wright, chairman of the building committee, left with her husband and family Thursday for their summer home in Sagastaweka, Canada.

Miss Hettie P. Anderson, general secretary, accompanied by her mother, will pass the month of July at her home in Illinois; Mrs. Minnie Ashby, assistant house secretary of the Elizabeth Somers residence, will pass several weeks in Frederick, Md., and Mrs. Helen Wells Fidler, of the administrative office, will spend her vacation at Wernersville, Pa.

Footlights and Shadows

By JOHN J. DALY

THERE is probably nothing in all the wide, wide world so forlorn as an abandoned theater. Even when a theater is merely vacant, between performances, it has a lost, lonely look. Down on the corner of Little Ninth street and C and Louisiana avenue northwest, just south of Pennsylvania avenue, where the produce merchants hold forth, stands the last vestige of the old Bijou theater. For years nothing has gone on within its walls save the silences of spring and summer, the moaning of winds of winter and rustling of autumn ghosts.

Comes word that interests having to do with automotive lines running from this to other cities are beseeching the commissioners to let them establish in the old Bijou a sort of general all-round terminal for interstate bus traffic; so that if the request goes through, where once held forth the glory of theater there shall be the purring of motors, the hustle and bustle attendant upon hackage.

Of all the old-timers in the city, I wonder how many recall the Bijou when the Bijou was the Bijou; before it reached its present state of dilapidation—when carriages of ladies and gentlemen stopped before its entrance doors to dismiss their charges of the night under glare of the calcium lights, or the old gas jets that once did duty before electricity came into being; just after candle power lost favor with the populace of another day and generation.

Though still young in years, there is no man in this city who knows more about old theater days in Washington than Ed. Walsh, a thespian by nature, star in his own right with every amateur theatrical venture of the late and early nineties, or thereabout; and even he, off-hand, could recall only that, years and years ago, he had seen Edward Arlen, or some such star, strut the boards at the old Bijou. Perhaps some of the real old playgoers of Washington, reading this, may step forward with a word or two that will recall pleasant memories to those who have almost forgotten the Bijou hidden away down there by the market. Certainly none of the youngsters in the city remember the long climb up the old staircase that led to the lobby of the Bijou. Yet, according to Billy Fowler, who for years has been in harness at the National theater, some of the greatest stars in the American theater served their apprenticeship with shows that played the Bijou.

Some years ago, writing an article about old theater days in Washington, I called upon the Hon. William and found him full to the brim with stories of the Bijou. It seems that in his younger days he was an usher there; or, if not an usher, a handy man in the box office. From there he went to Harry Rapley, where he has remained all of 30-odd years.

From Willum at that time I learned that Nat Wills, the comedian, broke into the theatrical game at the old Bijou; that in its heyday the house harbored some of the finest stars on the stage, though in later years it descended to the level of cheap melodrama and, later, low burlesque.

Going on ten years, there has been no theatrical venture of any sort at the Bijou. Its doors were closed some time back.

WASHINGTON theaters have held up pretty well under the strain. The National is undoubtedly the oldest of all, though the Bijou, as a building, out-ages it. Of course, the National has been burned and rebuilt three times, so that in its present form it is practically a new theater; but where the National now stands has been a theater site since the city was a town.

Over on the south side of the Avenue, Poli's stands on the site of the old Albaugh Grand Opera house, which was, after that, Chase's, the forerunner of Keith's at Fifteenth and G streets. In a few more years Poli's, too, will go the way of the Bijou. It stands on ground the government some day will use as a park, part of the mall or a site for a great Federal building.

Across from Lafayette square is the Belasco, which ran many years under the name of the Lafayette. That, as theaters go, is an old-timer and one of the finest theaters, too, in all the city; a relic of bygone days when splendor of theaters was found in high upholstering and gilded domes; in oil paintings and green rooms; in an atmosphere that at once gave off the odor of theatricals.

The Earle theater, newest in the ranks and an outgrowth of the old Cosmos on Pennsylvania avenue, now the Mutual, is said to be one of the finest pieces of theater architecture in the country; a sample of the new method of building theaters with great open spaces and free ventilation; no pillars or posts to hinder the view from any part of the house, so different from the old days, when theater construction had not reached its present state of perfection; when the main idea was to make a hall to house patrons and let those behind posts do the worrying. The Columbia is a rare sample of the old method, as, too, the Belasco, for there are the posts—and plenty of them. In a little while these relics of a by-gone day in theaterdom will have passed the way of the world, to give way to theaters like the Palace and the Metropolitan and the Rialto and the one to be housed in the new National Press club building.

Back to the Bijou, Fred Steckman and Charlie Hamilton, who hold membership in the Old-Timers' club, cite the days when Bert Leslie, the comedian who died in New York not long ago, wrote a play a week for a stock company that played on those hallowed boards; and Fred, blushing like a schoolboy, recalls the numerous times he played truant from classes at the old Columbian university, now George Washington, to go down to Little Ninth street and hear black-eyed Susie Roccomora, belle of the chorus in those days, sing:

"Rosie, you are my posie;
You are my heart's bouquet—
Come out into the moonlight;
For I have something I want to say," et

There must be other young fellows in Washington [illegible] those glorious days at the old Bijou. Before it assumed [illegible] the old house was known as Ford's theater, where, away back in the seventies, some of the greatest stars of all time walked the boards. Now it is "Good-by, By-Joe," as some of the boys, unfamiliar with the French, called the Bijou.

LON CHANEY BACK AGAIN AT PALACE

A thrilling mystery drama, "The Road to Mandalay," is the latest Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production which brings Lon Chaney, "the man with 1,000 faces," to Loew's Palace theater for the week beginning this afternoon, supported by a cast that includes Lois Moran, Owen Moore, Henry B. Walthall Kamiyama Sojin, Rose Langdon and John George.

"The Road to Mandalay," which reveals Mr. Chaney in one of the most sinister roles of his entire career, is Tod Browning's production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer of the story by Browning and Herman J. Mankiewicz. Laid in the Far East, the abode of mystery and dark deeds, "The Road to Mandalay" offers Chaney the characterization of a man who, evil and scarred by the world, achieves regeneration in a dramatic moment that will mark this production as one of the finest of Chaney's career.

Chaney is first seen as a sea captain whose wife, dying at sea, leaves him a little girl, who is reared by a kindly priest in strict ignorance of her father's identity. In the years that pass her father sinks deeper and deeper into crime until the time comes when he discovers that "the admiral," a renegade young Englishman, who is associated with the seaman in a lot of shady enterprises, is about to marry the latter's daughter, though no more aware than the girl of the seaman's real relationship.

Determined to save the girl from marriage with a rotter, the sinister seaman forces the priest to refuse to marry them and when the girl flees to a questionable resort to find her sweetheart, it is her father who saves her from not only her unworthy lover and an evil Chinaman, but does so at the cost of his own life and the complete wreck of his own enterprises.

The feature will be supplemented with the latest Charlie Chase comedy, "Mum's the Word;" the Pathe Newsreel pictures of world events, Topics of the Day and the usually splendid symphonic embellishment of the Palace Symphony orchestra under the direction of Mr. Thomas J. Gannon.

"SHOW OFF" TO REPEAT AT NATIONAL

Monday night sees one of the most successful plays ever presented by the National Theater Players go into a second week. "The Show-Off," George Kelly's keen and laughable insight into the frailties of a certain type of individual set a new attendance record at the National this last week and a second capacity week is looked for.

Romaine Callender takes new laurels in his portrayal of the name role. Dependable, always for consistently good performances, he rises to unexpected levels in the part of Aubrey Piper, the boastful nincompoop whose only asset is a glib tongue that more often proves a liability.

"The Show Off" was named by Burns Mantle, dramatic critic of the New York Daily News, as the first of the ten best plays for 1924. Mantle, who edits the yearly "Best Plays" volume, agreed with Heywood Broun that this play must be considered in the quest for the great American comedy. George Kelly, who wrote it, is also author of "Craig's Wife," awarded the Pulitzer prize this year as the best play by an American.

"Lightnin'," announced for this new week, has been canceled for the time being.

Emulates Wales.

Lige Conley did such a realistic "Prince of Wales" off a horse's back in "The Steeplechase" for Fox films that he's still reminded of it when he walks. Director Lex Neal told him to do it, among other things.

Gladys McConnell is Lige's leading lady in "The Steeplechase," the latest Imperial comedy to be filmed. The supporting cast includes Frederick Sullivan, Stanley Blystone, William Fletcher and Frank Rice.

WILDERNESS WOMAN AT THE METRO

A program that combines romance, adventure, humor and music will be presented at Crandall's Metropolitan theater this week, beginning this afternoon at 3 o'clock. The principal screen offering will be First National's picturization of Arthur Stringer's story of "The Wilderness Woman," in which the roles of conspicuous importance are played by Aileen Pringle, Lowell Sherman, Chester Conklin and Robert Cain. The supplementary attractions will embrace a selected first-run comedy of abbreviated length, a new issue of the Metropolitan World Survey and a specially arranged orchestral setting by the Metropolitan Symphony, under the conductorship of Daniel Breeskin, for both feature and short-reels.

The action of "The Wilderness Woman" pursues a course that leads from the snowy fastnesses of the Alaskan woods to the favorite haunts of New York's fashionable rich. The story concerns itself with an American prospector in the far north who finally sells his holdings to a Gotham millionaire for $1,000,000 cash. The first thought of Kadiak MacLean is to get back to a sufficiently civilized community to afford provender other than the pork and beans upon which he has subsisted for a continuous period of 25 years.

Having been completely intrigued by Alan Burkett's vivid descriptions of the sky scrapers, subways and other modern wonders of the metropolis, he decides to take his daughter, Junie, to New York to see the sights. Thrilled at the thought, she replenishes her wardrobe from a Sears-Roebuck catalogue of 1903. Not only that, but she insists on taking her pet grizzly cub to the Biltmore as an honored guest.

From this preliminary situation is derived a succession of amusing and suspenseful episodes in which the city slickers attempt to sell Kadiak the subway, and the polished-lobby wolves seek to despoil the bizarre but wealthy heiress.

The overture for the week will be comprised of melody gems from the late Victor Herbert's operetta, "The Fortune Teller," and the recurrent theme of the interpretative score arranged for the accompaniment of the major feature will be "Love's Awakening," by Fletcher. "The Girl Friend," song hit from the musical comedy of the same name, will enliven the exit.

STAR BILL AT KEITH'S THIS WEEK

Every phase of the vaudeville world is represented on the program which begins with the matinee today at B. F. Keith's theater. Heading the list of artists are the recent stars of "The Student Prince," Madeline Collins and Leonard Ceeley, the operatic prima donna and celebrated tenor from the royal opera, Covent Garden, London. This is their first appearance in vaudeville.

Bob and Gale Sherwoods and their entertainers will be featured for the week. This is a versatile aggregation of artists rendering classics and jazz in masterful style.

Ruth Budd, the girl with the smile, and one of vaudeville's greatest personalities, returns after a long absence spent in South America and South Africa.

Kramer and Boyle, "a happy-go-lucky pair," will do their hilarious stuff throughout the week.

Bob McDonald and Helen Oakes, two delightful young folks, known as "The Artistic Steppers," will entertain with their clever and splendid dancing.

POLA NEGRI IS FEATURE AT COLUMBIA

Pola Negri, fascinating Paramount screen star, supported by a cast that includes Tom Moore, Ford Sterling, Miss duPont, Stuart Holmes, Marie Mosquini and Warner Richmond, in "Good and Naughty," a romantic comedy of New York and Palm Beach, is announced as the featured star of the program for the week starting this afternoon at Loew's Columbia theater.

"Good and Naughty" is a picturization for Paramount by Malcolm St. Clair, director of "Are Parents People?" "A Social Celebrity" and other recent hits, including Pola Negri's last starring production, "A Woman of the World," of the famous New York stage play by Avery Hopwood, "Naughty Cinderella." It affords Pola Negri a superb opportunity not only for the exercise of her romantic and emotional talents but for her remarkable comedy touch.

In "Good and Naughty," the star has the role of the smock-clad assistant to a fashionable New York interior decorator who is pressed into service by her employer to portray the part of his fictitious fiancee during a yacht trip to Florida with a young matron whose husband suspects his wife and the interior decorator of a clandestine love affair. The sudden emergence of the assistant into a woman of fashion completely dazzles the yacht's company and not only separates the clandestine lovers, but enables the butterfly assistant to win her employer's love for herself.

The management of Loew's Columbia will supplement the feature with a group of added attractions, including the Sennett comedy, "Papa, Be Good;" the International Newsreel pictures, an embellishment by the Columbia Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Leon Brusiloff, as well as other features.

DOG STARS AT STRAND

The latest and greatest of these amazing police dog pictures comes to the Strand theater today; it is "Wild Justice," a dramatic thriller of the lonely snowclad north country. It stars Peter the Great, the largest police dog on the screen and generally reputed to be unexcelled in intelligence. This new romance of the snows unfolds an exciting drama woven around a mysterious murder. Peter the Great has unrivaled opportunity to display his remarkable athletic ability and his almost uncanny understanding of human emotions.

The supporting cast is equally worthy of note, being headed by such players as George Sherwood, Frances Teague and Frank Hagney. The picture is a John W. Considine, jr., production for the United Artist's Corporation.

IRENE RICH IS STAR OF RIALTO FILM

"The Pleasure Buyers," starring Irene Rich, is the feature photoplay at the Rialto, starting today, and is said to be about as exciting a mystery picture as the screen has given us. Adapted from Arthur Somers Roche's magazine story, it preserves the suspense of the original while adding to it an unexpected denouement that will surprise even those who have read the story.

The case concerns the murder of Gene Cassenas, a gay society favorite, who is shot while sitting in his luxurious home at a smart resort. The bullet has come through the window from the dark outside.

Back of Cassenas lies a career that has afforded justificaton for half a dozen murders, and suspicion finally concentrates upon half a dozen people.

"The Pleasure Buyers" are a gay social set who flock around the wealthy Gene Cassenas at the Palm Beach casino. He is engaged to marry pretty Helen Ripley, whose father breaks the engagement upon hearing unsavory details of Cassenas' reputation. During the excitement that follows, five people quarrel with Cassenas and threaten to kill him. When he is found murdered the following morning, it is almost impossible to fasten the guilt upon anyone until it is discovered that Joan Wiswell has telltale evidence in the Spanish gun with which Gene had presented her.

Clive Brook, who appeared in "The Home Maker," plays the male lead opposite Miss Rich, and the supporting cast includes Gayne Whitman, June Marlowe, Charles Conklin, Don Alvarado, Edward Peil, Frank Campeau, Winter Hall, Frank Leigh and John Dillon.

The added feature on the stage consists of a bathing girl revue, staged and directed by Mischa Guterson, and composed of local talent from the Gladys Wilbur studio, with a special uke number, featuring Gilbert & Wimp.

The selection of "Miss Washington" for the Atlantic City beauty pageant is also in progress. The competitors will be shown in person each Thursday night.

LEW KELLY IS FEATURE AT EARLE

Another bill of exceptional strength is announced for this week at the Earle theater, both the vaudeville and pictorial portions of the program possessing unusual merit. The headliner, beginning this afternoon at 3, will be Lew Kelly, supported by a clever cast, in his latest serio-comic playlet, "A Stretch of the Imagination." The droll Mr. Kelly needs no introduction to Washington audiences. His character creation of the "dope" is one of the classics of the stage, and his current vehicle for his deft portrayal of a unique type is the best of a long line of similar bits of brief dramaturgy.

The extra added attraction will be supplied by Hal Springford in "Feminine Follies," wherein he displays an uncanny ability to impersonate the opposite gender. Another distinguished offering will be that of Jesse Block and Francine Dunlap in "Orchids." This is a miniature musical comedy by two of the cleverest story, lyric and music writers in America—words by Will M. Hough, with a score of successes to his credit; music by J. Fred Coots, ditto.

Others who will contribute to the stage diversion are Mary Gautier and company, presenting one of the dumb marvels of the varieties—the only musical and dancing pony before the public. "Boy," and the country club girls, a quartet of gifted vocalists, who will present a musical treat under the title of "On the Links of Melody."

The photodramatic feature for the week will be a new producers' release, "Silence," in which the stellar role is played by H. B. Warner, supported by Vera Reynolds, Raymond Hatton, Rockliffe Fellowes, Jack Mulhall and Virginia Pearson. Mr. Warner has achieved a genuine triumph in this gripping film rendition of the stage hit of the same name by Max Marcin.

The bill will be further augmented by the customary abbreviated subjects.

Stage and Screen Presentations

Echoes of the New York Stage

By ROBERT BELL

"ONE of the Family" has had a long run—passing the 200 mark. I had not reviewed it heretofore because I thought "Easy Come, Easy Go," "Laff That Off" and "Love 'Em and Leave 'Em" sufficient unto themselves to take care of this year's representation in American farce-comedy—to say nothing, of course, of "Cradle Snatchers!" But except for one or two musical shows, there is litfle left now in New York which I have not seen, so on Saturday afternoon, with some reluctance, I went to the Eltinge theater, where, according to the billboard, Grant Mitchell is playing in "an uproarious comedy—'One of the Family.'"

The curtain had been up about twenty minutes when I arrived. The actors were lined up on the stage obviously in preparation for Grant Mitchell's entrance. Things had already been going rather furiously, apparently, for the audience, in a receptive mood, was laughing boisterously.

Even if I had not known how long the play had been running, the first moment in the theater would have convinced me that the production was far from a new one. The set, a living room of the Adams of Boston, showed signs of having been used not only for many weeks in the past show, but for others besides; the actors were spouting their lines with the assurance of a machine gun—and nearly as loudly. The whole affair had become systematized to perfection: the pauses after each joke were just long enough for the precisely proper amount of laughter to come from the audience.

COMING as I did from the crowded, sunlit streets of Broadway into the gloomy, artificially lighted theater, the players seemed like puppets, or rather automatons, for they had none of the imperfections of puppets which so delightfully never do exactly what you want them to.

The play itself was as definitely planned as were the players' performances, and being planned to amuse, it insisted upon amusing at all costs, even if it necessitated a Scotchman being given by mistake a sham cocktail in place of a real one, even if the hero must (also by mistake) imbibe freely of a real cocktail and under its influence, literally as well as figuratively, wipe up the floor with the villain who had insulted his wife. Furthermore, the author made certain that his play should contain sufficient sentimentality in the love scenes to delight the hearts of the most unsophisticated.

I do not want to seem too harsh on this type of play. It has its place in the theater. It is amusing for those who do not want to go through the effort of thinking while taking their entertainment. It may not be stimulating to the intelligentsia, but to the aunties and grandmas of the world—and there are many of them—it succeeds in taking them away for a little while from their humdrum existence by showing them other existences in which they see themselves, except that the author by one dramatic trick or another manages to shoot off a skyrocket in their humdrum midst. That is the appeal, I think, of such plays. The stage people are really ourselves, only more characterized, and they become involved in tangles which we could easily imagine ourselves in, but because life is a leveling process we have never experienced.

OCCASIONALLY such a play has originality and charm. "The First Year" was a notable example of this; so was the "Show Off;" and so this year was the slangy "Love 'em and Leave 'em." With such plays the ingredients have been carefully selected and amusingly mixed and a not unpleasing flavor, to say nothing of the "kick," is the result. But I found "One of the Family" uncommonly flat.

Beside Grant Mitchell, who I must confess did excellently with a stereotyped part, there was Louise Closser Hale, a comedienne of rare gifts who has at various times, despite a constant overstressing of her points, divested a comic role with genuine emotion and character. But on Saturday afternoon she was not good. To the audience she was excruciatingly funny, I admit, but I was shocked by the obvious trickery of her acting!

Her name in the play was "Miss Priscilla Adams," a daughter of the illustrious family which came over in the Mayflower and which gave one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence to America. Say over the name several times "Miss Priscilla Adams" and you must surely see that it should be played otherwise than by loud noises and much twisting of the features. "But it is what the public wants," you may reply.

MY answer is that you go at once and see Pomeroy's Past" and compare the work of Laura Hope Crews with Louise Closser Hale's. "Pomeroy's Past" is a more delightful play, and Miss Crews' lines are more subtle perhaps than Miss Hale's, but beneath all that there is a difference in the two players' "expression" which puts them on a totally different plain. Miss Crews' technique is as certain, as sure planned, as Miss Hale's; only it goes farther because she has learned the art of concealing art, which as everyone knows is the superb feat of the artist.

I would not be so bitter if I had not seen Miss Hale before and loved the delightful burlesque of her acting. She is the best character woman on our stage, and we need her badly. We can not afford to let the artist die, for there are, heaven knows, many enough vaudevillians in the theater and few artists. Dear Miss Hale, as one who has admired you for many years, very, very humbly I beg you to work less for the morons who are out front, laughing at you sometimes rather than with you, and listen more to the expression of your inner self, which with your fine sense of comedy would never lead you astray.

It is a little annoying, too, that I should have found in the cast an all but unknown actress, Jessie Crummette, who as the absurd Irish maid of the household, by the simplicity and truth of her performance brought forth, from me at least, more laughter, more genuine enjoyment than all the hard-working "projection" of Louise Closser Hale.

WORTH-WHILE PLAYS

THE VAGABOND KING—At the CASINO. Tuneful, colorful and well-acted operetta based on McCarthy's "If I Were King."

SUNNY—At the NEW AMSTERDAM. A clean musical comedy with Marilyn Miller. Sports several of the season's musical hits.

THE GREAT GOD BROWN—At the KLAW. A splendid ironic drama by Eugene O'Neill, in which the mask is used successfully.

LOVE 'EM AND LEAVE 'EM—At the TIMES SQUARE. A slice of department-store life presented through the medium of the smartest, funniest and most scathing slang heard on Broadway this season.

AT MRS. BEAMS—At the GUILD. The biggest financial success of the Guild's season. Jean Cadell has been imported from London to play the part she created there, and she is supported splendidly by Lynn Fontanne, Alfred Lunt, Helen Westly and Henry Travers.

THE GARRICK GAIETIES—At the GARRICK. A bright little revue with the youth and spirit of the Guild Juniors making up for their lack of technique.

Lowell Sherman has finally got a "break." In "The Wilderness Woman," to be shown for the first time in Washington at Crandall's Metropolitan and Ambassador theaters, beginning this afternoon, this suave disciple of infamy appears as the hero instead of the villain. It is a fine tribute to his art as an actor that Mr. Sherman is as effective as a protector of maidenly virtue as ever he was as an omen of evil in the lives of beautiful but defenseless women. With the facile Prof. Sherman expounding all of the finer attributes, it has fallen upon the competent shoulders of Mr. Robert Cain to carry the bulk of the drama's cussedness, with beautiful Aileen Pringle as the object of his perfidious machinations. Figure it out for yourself whether or not it ought to be good. The answer is "yes."

Four Outings Planned.

Four organizations will hold outings this week at Chesapeake Beach. The Sundy schools of Grace Episcopal church, Georgetown, and St. James' Episcopal church, will join the Cuthbert Class club of Peck Memorial chapel in excursions on Wednesday. The Grand International Auxiliary to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers will hold an outing on the same day. More than 2,500 persons are expected.

Daily excursion crowds at the beach are growing steadily. The summer colony now is well established but is increasing in size weekly. Ralph Carren and his Carolinians furnish dance music every afternon and evening. Bathing, fishing, boating, picknicking, board walk promenading and touring Amusement Fairyland are some of the attractions.

What will undoubtedly be hailed as a new standard in productions of its kind is "Fig Leaves," a Fox Films picture of the temptations of gorgeous gowns and luxuries for women. Howard Hawks, author and director, knew what he wanted—and he got it.

It is easily the most expensive film of this style made by Fox in some time, and this company has made a number of such notable pictures. Olive Borden, as a modern Eve, and George O'Brien, as the husband, Adam, move continually in settings of splendor.

Miss Borden moves, too, in ravishing creations of Adrian, a leading authority of women's dress. Every costume, both of Miss Borden and the mannequins, is individual, the latest version of the prevailing mode, or distinctly new in conception.

"Stolen Lady" Bought.

Universal announces the purchase of William Dudley Pelley's original story, "The Stolen Lady" as one of the features on its 1927-28 program of jewels. No star has been assigned to the leading role as yet, but it is thought to be ideally suited to Laura LaPlante's talents.

Coming Theater Attractions

What is tantamount to a command from the public has determined the National theater management to bring "Seventh Heaven" back to the boards again, and for the week beginning July 5 this heart-gladdening story of love in war-time Paris will be repeated, with exactly the same production behind it which distinguished it a week ago as one of the finest efforts accomplished by the National Players in either this season or last.

John Warner will again play Chico, a "remarkable fellow," by his own verdict, whose romance with Diane, a neglected waif, is interrupted at its start by the guns of 1914. Leneta Lane will do Diane, for whom the armistice is cruel mockery when she learns what the battlefields have done to the light of her life.

Jack Holt, Margaret Morris, Raymond Hatton, Arlette Marchal and George Seigmann constitute the featured quintet of Paramount favorites who will be seen in John Waters' production for Paramount of "Born to the West," the latest Western romance by Zane Grey, which will be presented as the featured attraction at Loew's Columbia theater for the week starting next Sunday, July 4. A hilarious Walter Hiers comedy, "Hitching Up," will be the added attraction of the bill.

"Padlocked," Rex Beach's tremendous Cosmopolitan magazine serial of modern manners and morals, which has been brought to the screen by Allan Dwan for Paramount with a cast that includes Lois Moran, Louise Dresser and Noah Beery, is announced as the featured attraction at Loew's Palace for the week starting next Sunday afternoon, July 4. The production will be supplemented by the latest Sennett comedy, "Hayfoot, Strawfoot," the Pathe News, topics of the day, Gannon's music and other hits.

A triple-star bill will be presented at the Earle theater next week, the outstanding vaudeville offerings being a terpsichorean spectacle entitled "Dance Revels," enlisting the services of ten artists and staged in three scenes; Earl Hampton & Co., in a clever sketch and "The Runaway Four." Two other sterling vaudeville acts will be added and the usual film features offered. The photoplay for the week will be "The Shamrock Handicap," a thrilling melodrama of Ireland and the American tracks, interpreted by an all-star cast.

The Al and Ray Rockett production of "Abraham Lincoln" with George Billings will open the week. "The Lost World" and "The Sea Hawk" will follow.

An extraordinary picture story of love, war and peace, filled with laughs, appeals and thrills, is "The Unknown Soldier," which comes to the Rialto next week.

Fred Williams (Charles E. Mack) loved the daughter of his employer, who frowned upon him as being unworthy, yet when his country called all to her defense he bravely went forth to fight, or if need be die, for his flag. They became man and wife in the sight of God; then came the order to march and disillusionment to the bride when by accident she learns that her marriage, performed by an imposter, is invalid. She climbs a garden wall as he marches by, but he mistakes her appeals to come to him for parting salutes and, waving to her, marches out of sight.

Next week at Crandall's Metropolitan theater will be featured by first Washington presentations of First National's production of "The Sporting Lover," in which the stellar roles are played by Conway Tearle and Barbara Bedford, supported by Ward Crane, Arthur Rankin, John Fox, jr., and others of attainment. The supplementaries will include comedy, World Survey and special music by the Metropolitan symphony, Daniel Breeskin, conducting.

Anna Q. Nilsson and Lionel Barrymore will appear in the stellar roles of First National's production of "The Splendid Road," at Crandall's Tivoli theater the first two days of next week. On Tuesday and Wednesday will be shown First National's release of the new "Quo Vadis," starring Emil E. Jannings; Thursday and Friday, Belle Bennett, Lois Moran, Lowell Sherman, James Kirkwood, Ben Lyon and Charlie Murray, in "The Reckless Lady;" Saturday, Reginald Denny, in "Rolling Home."

"The Sporting Lover," adapted from the Drury Lane melodrama, "Good Luck," will be the feature at Crandall's Ambassador theater the first three days of next week, with Conway Tearle and Barbara Bedford the stars. On Wednesday and Thursday, Anna Q. Nilsson and Lionel Barrymore will be seen in "The Splendid Road;" Friday, "The Non-Stop Flight;" Saturday, star cast, in "Money Talks."

The following feature bookings are announced for next week at Crandall's Central theater: Sunday, Monday and Tuesday and Wednesday Cecil B. D. Mille's "The Volga Boatman;" Thursday, star cast in "The Rainmaker;" Friday, Jack Holt and Esther Ralston, in "The Blind Goddess;" Saturday, Matt Moore and Dorothy Devore, in "Three Weeks in Paris."

Irene Rich "Queen."

Irene Rich, now starring in "The Pleasure Buyers," which comes to the Rialto this week, acted as queen during the Shriner's convention in Los Angeles. In one week more than 5,000 autographed photographs were given out to the nobles of the order by this beautiful screen star.

Following the announcement of her selection for this unusual honor, Miss Rich received some 2,000 telegrams, an uncountable number of letters and personal congratulations from hundreds of friends in Hollywood.

She was granted a vacation from the studio for the occasion of her "Shrine Reign," having hurried to complete her role in this picturization of the Arthur Somers Roche mystery novel.

Millionaire in Movies.

(By the Associated Press.)

Another millionaire in the person of Samuel S. Hinds, of Pasadena, Calif., has entered the movies.

He has a prominent role in "The Amateur Gentleman," the latest picture for Richard Barthelmess. Mr. Hinds' English estate also will appear in the photoplay. He has not given up his law practice, however.

MOVIE GRAPHICS

HARRY M. CRANDALL, founder of the theaters bearing his name in Washington and vicinity, now operated by the Stanley-Crandall Co. of Washington, of which he is executive vice president, underwent an operation for appendicitis at Garfield hospital last Monday morning. Several recurrent digestive disturbances which Mr. Crandall recently has suffered were diagnosed as chronic appendicitis, so when he had completely recovered from the last attack and his vitality was at its highest he decided to submit to the ether. His condition has been excellent and he already is on the high road to quick and complete restoration to perfect health.

Moviedom has its ranking nobility—the star, the featured player and the stock actor.

The star's name must be prominently displayed in advertisements and usually precedes the picture title. The featured player also is advertised, but not so prominently, and the name comes after the film title. The stock actor is recognized as worthy of development and sometimes is advertised.

Salary scales are in conformance with this ranking, but there are several "free lance" players—those not under contract to any one company—who make more than the stars themselves.

A judge may backslide without fear—in the movies.

Out at the Paramount Long Island studio George De Carlton, acting as judge in Ford Sterling's picture, fined the comedian a thousand dollars, or one year in jail, for reckless driving.

June Mathis will have the honor of inaugurating production activities at the huge new $2,000,000 First National studio in Burbank.

Definite announcement to this effect is forthcoming from the offices of John McCormick, general production manager of that organization on the West coast.

The first production, it is now established, will be "The Masked Woman," not "Sinners in Paradise," as previously announced.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

By ELISABETH E. POE.

WITH virtually the last of the concerts and recitals by the students of Washington musical instructors a thing of the past, this hard-working group of teachers will take well-earned vacations. Many will visit the great musical centers of Europe.

Organists and choirmasters will join in the exodus, and the musical features of the churches for the next six or eight weeks will consist of volunteer choirs and leaders.

Several Washington boy choirs maintain summer camps for their choristers, where the lads who serve so faithfully during the winter have their outings as the guests of the churches to which they are attached.

A novel plan is being tried by the Daniel Studio of Singing, which is maintaining a summer course as well as a weekly summer evening class in the study of part songs. Edna Bishop Daniel is in charge of the summer course, assisted by Mrs. Louis C. Wainwright, with Miss Louise B. Proctor as secretary. This summer school will give students in local institutions opportunity to pursue singing during their vacation periods, and in this way the school is a civic help in the movement to make Washington the musical center of America.

The military bands and the radio stations will bear the brunt of the concert work for Washington during the summer. And well they fulfill their duty, especially the military bands, whose programs often are of symphonic quality, both as to the assembling of instruments and the character of programs arranged.

Six of the youngest students in the piano and violin departments of the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia have been invited to appear as soloists at the orchestra concerts to be given next winter by the Stanley Music club, a new organization which scored a success during its initial season of 1925-26.

The youthful artists are between 14 and 17 years of age and will be the only soloists at the concerts, which are to be played by 100 members of the Philadelphia orchestra, under the direction of Arthur Rodzinski, Polish conductor, who led the orchestra last winter in the absence of Leopold Stokowski.

Four of the students were born in Russia, Shura Cherkassky and Lucie Stern, who are receiving personal instruction in piano from Josef Hofmann, head of the piano department, and Iso Briselli and Jascha Savitt, pupils of Carl Flesch, who directs the violin department at the Curtis institute.

Two are American born, one student, Jeanne Behrend, being a native Philadelphian with such a remarkable gift of composition that Mr. Hofmann may include some of her work on his future programs, the other, Lois zu Putlitz, a violinist of great promise, who came from Los Angeles, Calif., to study with Mr. Flesch.

The annual June recital of the pupils of John George Klein was given in the Cosmos Club auditorium on Friday. The students showed the results of careful training. Mrs. John George Klein was the accompanist. The program was by Dorothy G. Foote, Maybelle I. Burbridge, Frank E. Kingsbury, Effie M. Kessler, Harriet C. Kriegh, Arthur P. Hipsley, Helen Stoever Miller, Eunice E. Perrie, Marcel Prevost, Helen Hanlein, Pauline M. Bruner, Beulah N. Reever, Ruth Tuckey Shear and Harvey T. Townsend.

The Baroness von Rosenberg-Dreier, violinist, childhood pupil of Kneisel and later a student at Dresden under Lauterbach, was appreciatively heard in recital at the Washington club Tuesday evening. The recital was given for the benefit of the Humane Educational Society's Be Kind to Animals Rest farm. Grieg, Wagner, Fibich and Bohm were among the composers represented in the baroness' repertory.

"Walther's Preisleid," by Wagner, and Fibich's "Souvenir Poetique" were particularly stirring numbers on her program, and then after the popular closing group, "Ave Maria," "The Rosary," and "Spinning Song," the baroness was compelled to respond to encores. Assisting in the recital were Miss Goodwin, contralto, and Miss Hercum, pianist, whose rendition of Liszt's "Walderauschen" was notably pleasing.

George Perkins Raymond, tenor, who will sing in Washington next season, is a native of Ohio, a State that has been very prominent as the home of Presidents, but less conspicuous as the birthplace of artists. A good tenor, however, is such a desirable quantity that it matters not whence he comes. It used to be said that one must go to Italy to find the real tenor voice, but that theory has been nullified of late years because some great tenors have come out of sections less sunny than Italy. John McCormack came from Ireland, Dalmores and Muratore from France, Fleta from Spain, Tokatyan from Algeria, Johnson from Canada, while American numbers among many Althous, Chamlee, Diaz, Hackett, Harrold, Marshall, Martin, Meader, Murphy and the latest addition to the ranks, George Perkins Raymond.

Now tenors are just as different as sopranos, probably a little more so because of the great variance in timbre or tone quality. There is as much difference between the voices of Johnson and McCormack as between the voices of Galli-Curci and Melba. Some tenors have the high-pitched voice but lack the pure lyric quality; others have sweetness without power.

It is the combination of both elements that makes the great tenor consummated in such a wonderful singer as Caruso. The particular characteristic about Raymond is that he is a natural vocalist. It is no effort for him to sing music written for the tenor voice since his vocal chords are attuned to the higher tones and with this ease comes technical proficiency. Moreover, possessing that innate lyric quality and having added linguistic proficiency, he has come forward surprisingly fast while his appearances have gained quick and positive recognition due to the fact that he is a real tenor as well as a fine artist.

Mary Garden will sing before a New York audience this fall for the first time in five years. Her musical invasion will take place on October 23, as the opening program of the annual series of Roosevelt recitals at the Hotel Roosevelt.

According to the preliminary announcement, this will be Miss Garden's only New York appearance during the forthcoming season. She will give a "popular program," supported by Geza de Kresz, a new Hungarian violinist.

A party of 80 American music lovers arrived in New York a few days ago after two months of travel and recreation in Europe. A high point of their tour, they declared, came in their pilgrimage to Bonn for the annual music festival of the Beethoven House society, guardian of the composer's birthplace. The festival took on a special importance this year because of the approaching centenary of the master's death.

The American pilgrims were the guests at Bonn of Mme. Elly Ney, who now makes her home in Portland, Oreg., and who was the only piano soloist of the great festival, appearing in four programs. Following an old custom, the festival confined itself to performing the works of Beethoven and other important composers of the classic and romantic schools. Many quaint and rarely-heard works delighted the American visitors. The ensemble numbers were divided between the three greatest German quartets, and Madame Ney's playing of the Hammerklavier Sonata was the climax of the week's program. Her dozens of Beethoven concerts throughout Germany this year have solidified her reputation as the greatest living exponent of this composer.

Madame Ney will return to Portland in January for a series of American engagements in which she will feature numbers appropriate to the Beethoven centenary.

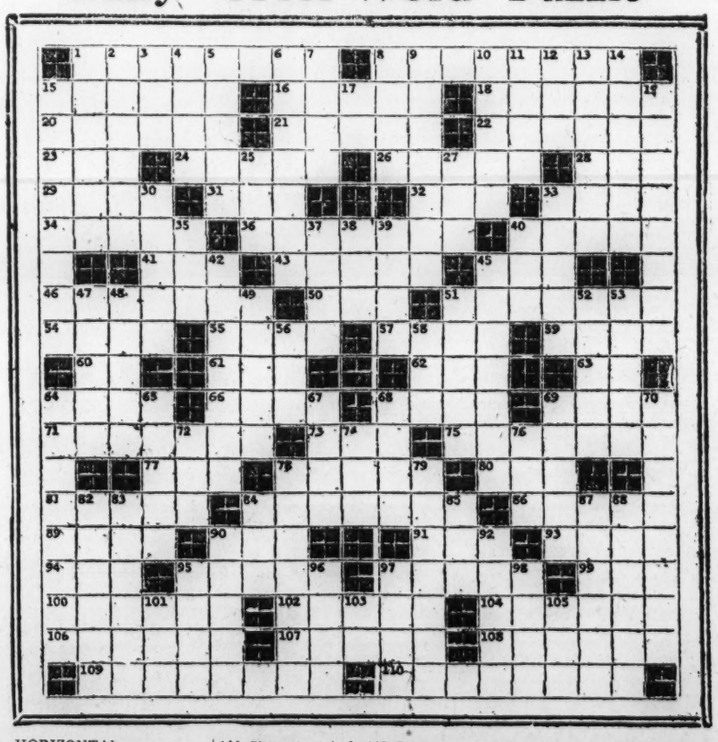

Leland B. Parker presented a group in piano recital Saturday evening at her studio. The pupils were assisted by Clara Young Brown, soprano. Those participating included: Edith Parker, George Thomas Santmyers, John Holt Wat-

Vaudeville Season Opens First Week in August

BLUE JAY ORCHESTRA AT TIVOLI

The original Blue Jay orchestra, comprised of thirteen bona fide collegiates from Johns Hopkins university in Baltimore, will be presented as an extra added attraction throughout the current week, beginning this afternoon at 3 at Crandall's Tivoli theater. This clever organization is under the conductorship of Enoch Light and offers a quick succession of lively rhythms interspersed with a variety of instrumental and vocal novelties. The Blue Jays will present two complete changes of program, the second to begin on Thursday.

The photoplay for the first two days of the week at the Tivoli will be Paramount's production of "The Blind Goddess," by Arthur Train, in which the foremost roles are played by Jack Holt, Ernest Torrence, Esther Ralston and Louise Dresser. The comedy for the first bill of the week will be Mack Sennett's "Trimmed In Gold," and the bill will be further augmented by abbreviated camera subjects and Otto F. Beck's pipe organ music, Ida V. Clark assisting.

"The Rainmaker," a stirring action-drama produced by Paramount with William Collier, jr., Georgia Hale and Ernest Torrence in the leading roles, will be the feature at the Tivoli on Tuesday and Wednesday. Lupino Lane in "Time Flies" will furnish the laughter and the Blue Jay orchestra will be heard.

For Thursday and Friday, the Tivoli announces Richard Barthelmess in First National's filmization of Richard Harding Davis' story of "Ranson's Folly." Added hits will be "Helen and Warren" in "Too Many Relations" and the Blue Jay orchestra.

Historic Playground.

Marshall Hall, located in a most beautiful and historic spot on the Potomac, offers pleasure seekers practically everything to delight and amuse. A number of new rides provide thrills, while the other score or more of diversified fun features entertain both young and old. Free dancing in the large pavilion to music by McWilliams' band is one of the most popular features of Marshall Hall this season. The steamer Charles Macalester makes three trips daily and Sunday to Marshall Hall, leaving Seventh street wharf daily at 10 a. m., 2:30 and 6:30 p. m.; Sundays at 10:30 a. m., 2:30 and 6:30 p. m. On week days the steamer stops at Mount Vernon on the 10 a. m. and 2:30 p. m. trips.

Thrills Are Provided At Glen Echo Park

The vacation season is now getting under way, as evidenced by the increased number of visitors to Glen Echo park in the daytime. Local as well as out-of-town patrons make up the crowds. At night, of course, Washington's fun lovers throw off the cares of work at Glen Echo as they have been doing for years. The cool ride along the Potomac is a prelude to the fun at the park. "The humming bird," for instance, newest thriller, gives the same feeling to the rider as a hop off on an airplane, with a couple of loop the loops thrown in. Less rigorous rides are provided by the whip, the derby racer and caterpillar. Dancing every evening except Sunday from 8:30 p. m. until closing time at 11:30 p. m.

Exhibitors Meet.

The first organization meeting of the Washington motion picture exhibitors pledged to cooperative activity looking to the furtherance of the "greater movie season" of 1926-27 was held in the projection room of Crandall's Metropolitan theater last Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, with Jack Pegler, representative of the Will H. Hays organization, presiding, and Nat B. Browne acting as secretary. Plans for making the coming season "bigger and better" in every way in the view of the public were discussed at length and a pilot committee for the intensive campaign to be launched August 1 was appointed, with Joseph P. Morgan, general manager of the Stanley-Crandall interests, chairman. Others appointed to serve include A. Julian Brylawski, George A. Crouch, C. H. Olie, Joseph Makover, and Nelson B. Bell. The producers and distributors of pictures have pledged themselves again to release their finest productions a month earlier than was formerly the custom in order to insure the cream of the year's output of photoplays for the inauguration of the "greater movie season" drive.

At Colonial Beach.

Delightful salt-water bathing, fishing, crabbing, dancing, and the long concrete boulevard, with a score of attractions, are some of the features that make Colonial Beach "Washington's Atlantic City." Colonial Beach is reached by a 70-mile ride on the Potomac aboard the steamer St. Johns, which leaves the Seventh street wharf every Saturday at 2:30 p. m. and every Sunday morning at 9. Free dancing on the dance deck of the St. Johns is another popular feature of every trip. At Colonial Beach are hotels and cottages that provide accommodations for the day, over the week-end or more extended vacation period, at very reasonable prices.

PRINGLE AT AMBASSADOR

Aileen Pringle, Lowell Sherman, Chester Conklin and Robert Cain will be seen for the first time in the National Capital in the stellar roles of First National's picturization of Arthur Stringer's story of "The Wilderness Woman" at Crandall's Ambassador theater the first three days of this week, beginning this afternoon at 3 o'clock.

"Silken Shackles," scheduled as the chief attraction for Wednesday and Thursday at the Ambassador, provides excellent roles for the brilliant talents of Irene Rich, Huntley Gordon and Victor Varconi. The story is of a gay young woman who thought her husband was only a husband, but a young Hungarian violinist the epitome of romance. Charlie Chase will afford the merriment in "Mama, Behave" and added film and musical contributions will round out the bill.

Rod La Rocque, Elinor Fair and Julia Faye are the principals in a comedy punctuated by thrills, to be offered at the Ambassador on Friday only under the title of "Bachelor Brides." Christie's "Dancing Daddy" and a new Pathe Review will complete the entertainment.

On Saturday only, William Collier, jr., Georgia Hale and Ernest Torrence will be seen in the pivotal roles of Paramount's "The Rainmaker," a fast-moving action drama, which will be supplemented by "Our Gang" in "Better Movies," Screen Snapshots and "The Radio Detective," No. 5.

Metro to Remodel.

Plans have been completed for the closing of Crandall's Metropolitan Theater for a period of two weeks immediately after the last performance the night of July 18, which is Sunday. This means that the last week before alterations are commenced will contain eight days as far as picture exhibition is concerned. The showing of the last bill before closing will begin, as usual, on Sunday, July 11, and continue through the following Sunday, the 18th. The same condition will prevail when the house reopens on July 31, except that the inaugural eight-day week will embody two Saturdays instead of two Sundays. During the two weeks that the popular F street house will be closed the lobby will be entirely remodeled; the main floor and balcony, including the loge boxes, will be reseated, and the stage will be materially altered. The entire house will be newly carpeted and numerous other minor improvements made. It is expected that the work to be done in the fortnight of darkness will represent a total expenditure in the neighborhood of $50,000, but when it is completed the Metropolitan will be recognized as one of the handsomest, most commodious, comfortable and best-equipped theaters in the East.

Two Bands Provide Music at the Lake

With Meyer Davis music featured on both dance pavilions at Chevy Chase lake, dance lovers are finding this resort the ideal spot for an evening's amusement and relaxation.

While both of the lake bands are of the famous Meyer Davis persuasion, each has a pronounced individuality all its own. The band led by Tommy Thompson holds forth on the lower pavilion. Leader Tommy Thompson is an expert exponent of pep in the form of torrid rhythm and wailing blues.

Vaudeville and dance music are combined in an always entertaining ratio by the upper pavilion band, led by the favorite Ben Levine.

Delightful scenic surroundings are an important part of the Lake's attractions.

St. Patrick Players At Wardman Park

The St. Patrick Players will present their "Miniature Revue" at the Wardman Park theater for an entire week, beginning this evening at 7 o'clock. This revue will be staged in conjunction with the Moving Picture guild's first showing of a reissue of Mark Train's comic romance, "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court."

All the favorites of the St. Patrick's aggregation have been secured for this revue. Estelle Murray and Royal Foster, perhaps the most popular dance team in the city, have a new number for the Wardman Park audience. Helen Gallagher, who earned the appellation of "The Swedish Nightingale," when she starred in the first "Uncle Sam Follies," is also in the cast.

Laemmle to Europe.

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures Corporation, sailed for Europe aboard the Berengaria recently. He was accompanied by his son, Carl Laemmle, jr., and his daughter, Miss Rosabelle Laemmle, Mr. and Mrs. Siegfried Laemmle, Walter Laemmle, Paul Kohner, casting director at Universal City; Tom Reed, special press representative; J. H. Ross, secretary; Louis Marx, and Mr. and Mrs. Joe Kramer. Mr. Laemmle's visit to Europe this summer will, as usual, consist of a tour of Universal's offices on the continent, as well as a stay at Laupheim in Wuerttemberg, his childhood home.

"CHAMPION" AT CENTRAL

"The New Champion," to be seen for the first time in Washington as outstanding feature of the bill announced for the first two days of this week at Crandall's Central theater, beginning this afternoon at 3, affords William Fairbanks one of his most fruitful opportunities to display his prowess as an athlete and his romantic appeal as a virile lover. The supporting cast is one of excellent selection. The comedy for the first two days of the week will be supplied by Cliff Bowes in "Hold 'er Sheriff," in addition to which the special reel, "Wild Beasts of Borneo" and the popular "Topics of the Day" also will be shown.

Norma Talmadge will occupy the Central's screen on Tuesday and Wednesday in First National's sprightly film version of the Belasco stage success, "Kiki." A new Aesop Fable will be added.

Harold Lloyd will be seen at the Central on Thursday and Friday in "For Heaven's Sake," his first feature comedy for Paramount, in which he is supported by Jobyna Ralston and Noah Young.

"That's My Baby," a new Paramount vehicle for the talents of a former Washingtonian, will bring Douglas MacLean to the Central on Saturday only. Billy Dooley will be responsible for the additional laughter as star of Christie's "Shore Shy."

Each daily bill will be completed by added short reels and pipe organ accompaniment and solo intervals by the Central's solo artists at the console.

FORMER BELL HOME CENTER FOR ARTISTS

By ADA RAINEY.

IN the quaint-looking little building connected with the old Graham Bell house at 1355 Connecticut avenue, all unsuspected to the passerby, is a studio where assemble a group of artists throughout the year for sketching and painting, as well as for more convivial entertainment. The studio belongs to Lillian Burke and Virginia Alderson, who are artists and make their headquarters here. The building itself has an interesting history. Here it was that the late Graham Bell had his famous evenings, where scientists from everywhere assembled to give and exchange ideas that have since become practical realities in this practical world. The studio was fitted up as a sort of salon where these informal assemblies were held. A concert grand piano was an indispensable part of the entertainment, and artistic things from China, Japan and India formed the decorative background.

In the room below is a swimming pool, where the house guests could indulge in a plunge when the weather was favorable. The pool was lighted by electric lights that glowed from old ships' lanterns, and the whole atmosphere conducive to art, industry and activity. Later on this room was the scene of the artistic triumphs of the Rams Head Players. It was fitted up with a stage, raised seats, dark curtains and subdued lights, and new and original plays were put on in a most artistic manner.

When the Rams Head players moved up to Wardman Park inn with their new and enlarged theater especially constructed for them, the seats were removed, a front entrance made through a window and Lillian Burke took up her abode here with a friend and her copper work as companions. The dressing rooms were made over into bedrooms, the stage was left and is still used for special and impromptu dances and plays. Below where the Rams Head players painted their scenery and made and dyed their costumes, there is a kitchen, dining room and workshop. The studio itself has the atmosphere of its past glories, but the present activities are even more interesting, as it is here that the young artists dream, work and play.

The room is filled with choice things from Poland, India and various parts of Europe, where the owner lived for four years immediately at the close of the war. For all this time Lillian Burke was with the army of occupation as a reconstruction aide and taught the men metal work of various kinds as well as other form of craft work. Miss Burke is a skilled craft worker and has many objects in her studio that the soldiers whom she taught, made.

It was in brass obtained from the shells that were made for use in warfare, that the material was obtained to make the different things when the men first learned their craft work. There is a lamp with the shade made of this shell brass, candle sticks of a floral design, flower bowls, cigar holders, plates and a whole brass tea set. This metal work is of excellent form with interesting designs chased or incised on the surface. Then work in textiles was taught the men and some of the results in block printing are extremely good.

Miss Burke herself does many kinds of crafts work, including various sorts of copper work of unique design and interesting textiles, painted and with block prints. She is at present painting the new parasols that are a vogue at present; parasols that are made of oiled cloth in Japanese style and painted with flowers. They are quite practical for rain as well as sun.

The first of July Miss Burke will leave Cape Breton island, Nova Scotia, where with Mrs. David Fairchild she is teaching new designs and the use of good vegetable dyes to the Canadians for their hooked rugs. These rugs can be made in really good designs. Instead of using the crude mineral dyes that are so common among untrained workers, the beauty of the softer, more harmonious vegetable dyes is taught. The results of this instruction are most interesting, as many of the rugs are sold to the summer residents and tourists, netting a comfortable sum for the women workers.

Miss Burke has recently been appointed chairman of the industrial arts committee of the Arts club, and announces that the committee has a number of interesting activities for the coming fall and winter. William Partridge will speak during the coming summer on the sesquicentennial at Philadelphia.

Designs for Tea Rooms.

Virginia Alderson and Inez Hogan will leave within the next ten days for Gloucester, where they have an artists' tea room. For the furnishing of this tea room, known to the artists as "The Ship," the group of artists composing the "Sketch Club," which meets in the studio of Miss Burke and Miss Alderson, have each designed and painted a top for one of the tables of "The Ship."

Charles A. R. Dunn, who has three paintings in the present show of the "X" painters at the Corcoran gallery, has designed a series of scenes called, "The Life of an Artist." There are about 15 of these caricatures, at which Mr. Dunn is an expert. The patrons can spend the time between courses studying the scenes. Prentiss Taylor has designed a futuristic painting, "The Russian Fair," brilliant in color.

Bobby Burns has contributed a scene of "Harlequin Columbine and Pierott;" Spencer Burr, "Ships that Pass in the Night;" Elizabeth Hammond, "Fairy Tale," and John Allen, of the National School of Fine and Applied Art, a scene from "The Bottom of the Sea." The paintings will be treated with several coats of varnish that will make them impervious to water. They will prove a center of interest to the frequenters of "The Ship" during the summer months.

Mary G. Riley Paintings.

The art of Mary G. Riley is a delicate and exquisite expression. Most of her paintings are landscapes, yet there is great diversity and charm in them. They include impressions of houses, street scenes, villages that nestle among the hills of France and other impressions of her many travels. Last summer Miss Riley spent in France, in the south and in Brittany, that land beloved of painters, and has brought back with her a number of delightful paintings, notably "Cagnes," "Dinon-Harness Maker's Shop" and "Ploermel-Brittany." These landscapes and street scenes have a soft gray atmosphere about them which has an enveloping charm. There is excellent construction and a fine sense of values that show understanding and appreciation of the fundamentals of art.

Miss Riley has exhibited in Washington from time to time, but her work is not so well known as it should be by reason of its excellent qualities. She had a "One Man Show" at Ainselees in New York last year and a landscape, "Mount Rachais, Grenoble" in the last biennial at the Corcoran gallery. She has also exhibited at the Women's University club.

The West has also appealed to her and a number of interesting canvases are the result, including "La Vellita," and other impressions of the Indians and the land they inhabit.

Miss Riley will soon leave with Miss Osgood, another artist, to paint in Nova Scotia this summer. Several paintings in and around Mystic, Conn., are particularly attractive. These are of another summer's work. Her art is sane, yet spontaneous, free and well built up. It is to be hoped that we may have a further opportunity to have on exhibition the paintings of this sensitive artist.

Artist Sails for Europe.

Eleanor Parke Custis has sailed for Europe where she will remain for three months painting in the Italian lake region and in Switzerland. She travels with another artist, Gertrude Kay, an illustrator.

Hutchins Going Abroad.

Will Hutchins, the instructor in the history of art in American university, will sail for Europe shortly, to be gone until in September. Mr. Hutchins goes with the special purpose of studying the great painters in the museums in Spain, Paris, Belgium and Holland. He is preparing to give a special course next year in modern art, and is taking this means of completely preparing himself to become conversant with the background from which modern art comes to view.

Mr. Hutchins is himself an artist, but his paintings are not in the least in the manner of the new school, so he will come to the new phase in art without a prejudiced viewpoint.

Beverly Harris Etchings.

Beverly Harris, who has been teaching the only class in the city in etching, has some delightful etchings of his own that have not been shown as often as they merit. These etchings are of diverse subjects, and include street scenes from Washington, showing the picturesque aspect of the city. A view of the building of The Washington Post, with the Willard hotel in the distance, seen from Pennsylvania avenue, has special interest, as no one has, as yet, thought there were artistic possibilities in just this part of the city.

It is well to have our eyes opened to see from the point of view of the artist, which is sure to have an added something that it is well to include in our own mental equipment to increase the richness of our own minds, for after all, it is only as we contact things through our minds do we possess them and enter into the enjoyment of life.

As Stevenson aptly says, "Life is full of a number of interesting things." We can see a number of these interesting things in the studio of Mr. Harris; who, besides being an active architect and etcher, is also a painter in oil and a crafts worker. At a recent craft workers' exhibit at the Arts club were a number of textiles in Batik of original designs and lovely color. These batiks were in the nature of decorative compositions that were entirely out of the ordinary work of this kind. They are in reality murals in silk, as one artist in this form of art is now calling her work, and which is an excellent designation. Far too often do inartistic workers bring anathema upon a craft that in itself and when properly wrought is truly a medium of artistic expression.

In photography, which is also now in the catagory of the fine arts, this versatile artist has been experimenting with unusual results. He works in portraiture in his studio in the evening with strong lights which give an unvarying and dependable light which he uses to advantage in his work. This enables him to bring out dramatic possibilities in the expression and postures of the model that prove a source of pictural expression that has unused opportunities. Mr. Harris has just completed the working design for a library in the small New England town of Guilford that shows how attractive a building can be made that is in harmony with its environment, and the possibilities for building beauty into the very life of the town.

TRAVEL BOOK BY RINEHART GRAPHIC TALE

Mary Roberts Rinehart goes adventuring and relates her experiences in her own entertaining and graphic fashion in her latest book, "Nomad's Land" (George H. Doran Co., New York).

As is true of most of the modern book of travels which have pleased the public fancy, this book is written as a personal narrative with delightful little paragraphs of personalities thrown in for good measure. There is no doubt that Mrs. Rinehart is able to see much as she travels about the world, which would escape the ordinary gaze. Attention is directed toward the little bits of human nature she has been able to cull out of the conglomerate mass of sight-seeing for the diversion of her readers.

Mrs. Rinehart, in this new book, has pointed out the truth of the real enjoyment of traveling and seeing new lands, in the recognition of the fact that the actual taking part in the life and thought of the people means much more than being a casual onlooker. She expressed deep regret that she had not realized sooner that travel is not only a matter of seeing but of doing.

"It is much more than that," she declares. "It is a matter of new human contacts. It is not of places but of people."

Romance and adventure are found by this great American writer, who follows the trail from the mountains of Wyoming to Bagdad and the deserts of the East.

Mrs. Rhinehart's sense of humor is paramount even under the most exciting and exacting circumstances of travel, whether on the back of pack mule or on a long trek of 100 miles on the back of a camel.

In describing her first sensations on the back of a camel, Mrs. Rhinehart points out that the first few minutes are not laughing ones.

Quite as entertaining is Mrs. Rhinehart's description of her air flights; her life on a ranch, and always the human contact and understanding of the people she meets in her wanderings. This book, to readers of Mrs. Rhinehart's works generally, will be very interesting, as it gives real glimpses of the woman herself, and the ideals and motives which actuate her in her relation to her fellow mortals.

GUEDALLA'S REVOLUTIONARY REVIEW PLACES HISTORICAL CHARACTERS IN NEW LIGHT

In "Fathers of the Revolution," Philip Guedalla (G. P. Putnam's Sons New York), has described the paternity of the struggle of the American colonies and its successful issue to characters, some of whom might object to the designation were they given the opportunity to do so.

There is something fantastic in calling George III a "Father of the Revolution," but such in a very great sense he was. As the historian says: "He was numbered among the men who (some of them without intending it) made two nations grow where one nation grew before."

However it is well that Mr. Guedalla's unique theory is not carried out in toto in historical writings. Else in the future our children's children might be confronted with the vain doctrine that Wilhelm II was the founder of world democracy or that Pontius Pilate was the chief apostle of Christianity. That opposition does crystalize belief into action is an accepted turism, but to name the enemies of a given cause its "father" is really somewhat of a strain upon the imagination and patience of one's readers.

Sir Edmund's Tribute.

The tribute of Sir Edmund Gosse, in which he states that Philip Guedalla is "the hope of literary history, the paladin to whom we look to deliver us from the dragon of historical dreariness," is well sustained by that gentleman's present work. It does sparkle and it avoids the usual pitfall of such volumes, over stress on dates and underplay of human incident.

In a recent speech in Washington Sir Esme Howard, Ambassador of Great Britain, told of passing his childhood in a stately English home where his ancestor had named the various woods and lanes and fields in honor of the American liberators. There was Washington wood and Franklin field and similar spots kindled in this English lad's soul an admiration for the men of his blood who wrought a nation overseas. The Ambassador emphasized this point to show that there were many notable Englishmen who sided in with the colonists in the struggle with the mother country. Mr. Guedalla has depicted the careers of several of these American protagonists of Revolutionary days.

Not the least of the charms about "Fathers of the Revolution" is the introductory chapter "A Short Treatise on Truth," a subject on which many authors and essayists have discoursed, but not all with as brilliant success as Mr. Guedalla.

Portrait of George III.

The portrait to appear from the author's canvas is that of King George III. For generations we have followed the fashion of lambasting this royal gentleman in America, heaping upon his poor, mad shoulders the full blame of the debacle which cost England her fruitful colonies. In the world war in order to justify our alliance with Great Britain, which needed no justification, some extremists absolved every one in Great Britain from the responsibility of the war against the colonies, and attributed it all to "a German king." That there was historical weakness in such a theory can be shown when it is remembered that the Emperor of Germany was more than sympathetic with American ideals of freedom, and Baron von Steuben and other German officers in the Continental army gave much valuable training to the colonial soldiery.

George III, both as foe and "Father of the Revolution," presents a pitiable picture. In these more scientific days this royal prince would be classed as a high-class defective." Illy educated, introspective, chained by golden fetters to a state he could so poorly adorn, he was certainly an outstanding example of the "Uselessness of Kings." Swayed hither and yon by the whims and schems of prime ministers and court officials, it was small wonder that the prestige of old England was dimmed during his regime and that under him it should lose one of the choicest gems in its crown of dominion.

Battle of Kings.

When the dawn of the revolution arrived George III dimly saw "that personal government had met the fatal challenge of an unconsenting people." Though he knew it not, in his feeble person he was fighting the last battle of kings, the results of which are just now beginning to be keenly felt in the halls of monarchs. The American Revolution was to pull down the pillars of the last stronghold of the doctrine of the divine right of kings, and, moron, though he was, George III grasped the situation in this regard better than did some of his ministers.

So far as he could George III resisted the onward march of progress. That there was an element of fairness in the aged little man can be seen when it is recalled that after the smoke of battle had died away and the successful rebel daughter sent John Adams as her Ambassador to the court of St. James, the king stifled all resentment and said to New England John, "I will be very frank with you. I was the last to conform to the separation, but the separation having been made and having become inevitable, I always said, as I say now, that I would be the first to meet the friendship of the United States as an independent power."

Louis XVI Dull Ruler.

He was dull, King Louis XVI, and it was his dullness which brought him to his bitter end. By a strange stroke of fatality his very assistance to the American colonies was the match which lit the slow-burning fuse that was to lead to his own overthrow. Because the American revolution was the father of the French revolution. In this case the child was fiercer and less manageable than the parent, and in ferociousness it certainly improved upon the original article. Yet the fates which make us very often arbiters of our own fortunes induced Louis to consider the appeal of America from the viewpoint of a selfish friend.

It is not too much to say of him that he loved America little, but England less. The American alliance appealed to him chiefly as a means to strike at that vexatious foe across the channel. Soldiers of fortune were thick about his throne, a few of them could easily be spared to aid the Americans, and anyway Ben Franklin was an amusing old chap, and deserved some reward for keeping the court entertained with his poor Richard drolleries. The adroit Vergennes played on these feelings of Louis, and got the state papers signed with the signet—and all was well.

Lord North is summed up in a striking chapter as another "father of the Revolution." Perhaps his most distinguished right to that high claim was "with an intelligence rare among civilian statesmen in time of war, he left the war to soldiers." Now that can not be done; diplomacy and statecraft must enter into the equation if the answer is to come out correctly. There is no doubt but that Lord North had a keen distaste for the job upon which he was engaged. Mr. Guedalla says: "But he struggled on, until the news of Yorktown came; and North took it 'as he would have taken a ball in his breast, opening his arms and exclaiming wildly, O, God! it is all over.'" * * * "The colonies were free; and North had earned his statue."

PHILIP GUEDALLA.

Defines Debt to Earl.

The debt due to William Pitt, earl of Chatham, is more clearly defined both in history and in Mr. Guedalla's book. He was a Don Quixote tilting against the windmills of royal opinion in the defense of the colones. He stoutly declared, and risked his political neck if not his actual one by the statement, that "this kingdom has no right to lay a tax upon the colonies."

In his last hours this man was heard to gasp, "My lords, if I were an American as I am an Englishman, while a foreign troop was landed in my country, I never would lay down my arms—never—never—never." Good words, these, and true. So there will be none found who will object to naming the earl of Chatham a "Father of the American Revolution."

Edmund Burke, peace maker, is highly praised in a chapter on his career. He had a real instinct for freedom and he knew how to express his thoughts in phrases that men would remember for all time. He it was who stood in the British house of commons and, glancing up at the newspaper men in the gallery above the speaker's rostrum, exclaimed:

Praised Newspapers.

"There are three estates of the realm, lords spiritual, the lords temporal and the commons. The newspaper press as a power might well be called 'The Fourth Estate,' with a moral power far greater than the other three." Thanks are due him for all time for this happy phrasing and felicitous turn of thought.

Lieut. Gen. John Burgoyne is presented next as a "Father of the Revolution," on the theory that history is made by defeat as well as victories. 'Tis indeed a unique doctrine that there should be a fresh award of laurels and this time they should go to Lord Cornwallis and John Burgoyne. "Did they not lose the war and found the United States?" naively inquires Mr. Guedalla. Yet bays gleaming on their brows will not set easily upon the vision of patriotic societies within the confines of this republic, and we warn Mr. Guedalla to be careful how far he goes with his little joke.

No shadow rests upon the final chapters of the book ascribing George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, Samuel Adams, Alexander Hamilton and Marquis de Lafayette as "fathers of the Revolution." In a very true and real sense they were. Their participation in this historic struggle is a matter of national pride and record.

There is much philosophy in the "Footnote on Greatness," which concludes this most notable book. In it he waxes really brilliant and there is a fine flavor to many of his sentences. As a volume for the more serious moments of vacation days, this book has not been surpassed in the spring printings.

EUCHARISTIC MOVEMENT TOLD IN BOOK

No one within or without the Catholic Church who has read the graphic descriptions of the Eucharistic congress events can fail to feel the pulse of spiritual feeling which is behind this demonstration of twentieth century faith in the doctrines of Christianity.

The history of the eucharistic renaissance which is the motivating power of such congresses is authoritatively told in "The Eucharistic Renaissance," by Thomas M. Schwertner, O. P., editor of the Rosary (The MacMillan Co., New York), which comes from the presses at this most opportune moment.

It gives the story of the interior life of the church during the last few decades of which these congresses have been the outward demonstration, as it were.

It is interesting to note that in his preface the author points out that "the liturgical renaissance of our day is a guarantee that now, since men have the 'movie mind,' the church will educate the heart through the eye as she did in the medieval times when books were rare. The Catholic people have alway delighted in the pageantry of the liturgy, but surely not since the Reformation more so than precisely in our own day.

In his first chapter Dr. Schwertner discusses the eucharistic renaissance of the nineteenth century "which gave its devotional life a stamp all its 'own.'" He points out the decay of eucharistic devotion after the reformation, stating that "with the sacramental system of the church explained away and discarded, devotions simply can not exist, much less thrive."

It is brought out that the inter-National Eucharistic congresses had their origin in France and developed there to a hardy growth before setting out for the conquest of the world. They owe their first inspiration to the piety of Mary Martha Aemilia Tamisier, of Tours, France. Her earnest endeavors led to the holding of the first Eucharistic congress which was held at Lille in 1881.

From that time to the present the international Eucharistic congresses have advanced steadily in importance and attendance, until this culminating one in Chicago which has drawn together a million souls, from cardinal to humblest layman, from all parts of the world to attend its sessions.

Not only the Catholic clergy but the laity as well should rejoice that this book has been written setting forth so constructively the story of this great movement.

Latest Books Tersely Reviewed

THE GREEN MUSTACHE. By Warrington Dawson. (Bernard Publishing Co., Chicago.)

"A modern fantasy" is the way in which this book is described in its foreword. It calls upon one to look backward in order to see forward, a difficult task for all but the specially gifted with double joints or similar physical appliances for such a feat.

The main theme of the book deals with "elixirs" compounded in secret by those who use this means disguised as fragrant perfumes to achieve their purposes, to win the love of those about them and to enthrall the general public. So fascinated are the men and women in the book with this pursuit of elusive fragrance that women dare the dangers of having their locks turned green for a few drops of the mystic essence and count the world well lost for "perfume's sake."

A jealous husband and lover, however, search for traces of green on the mustaches of the men characters. The author takes occasion to outline his own views on modern life, and suspicions as well, when he writes: "The craving for superficial emotions; for unhealthy sensations lies at the root of crazy literature, of insane music, of painting, of grotesque fashions and intellectual fads, of unbalanced individual conduct, of fanatical religions and philosophical conceptions and even much of the piratic business whose immoral sway controls the activities of men."

This is an attempt to link up the communist ideas of the home and women with the mystical stories and existing traditions of early Amazons.

In the closing chapter, the writer declares that it was the Amazon woman who resisted the enslavement of woman by the male. "She was none other," he declared, "than the primitive communist woman, the equal if not the superior of the male, struggling against his usurpation of rights over her." According to the writer's theory, she was vanquished and became man's slave, chattel and plaything.

In the closing paragraph the writer declares the warrior in woman is not yet dead, that if she is a working woman and is to attain freedom, "she must rally with her class around the standard of the proletarian revolution."

The existence of the Amazon, according to Mr. Kanter, has been proven by the traditions of many lands in lieu of written records, which were practically unknown among primitive people.

The theory is advanced that the Amazons, the fierce women warriors of antiquity, have played an important part in the evolution of man from barbarism to civilization. This little book contains much interesting data and evidence of the existence of the Amazons and the effects they have had on the progress of the primitiev world.

THOMAS BURKE, author of "East of Mansion House," which has just been published, from a wood cut by Zadig.

MATTER AND LIFE. By Angelo Marco. (Harold Vinal, New York.)

The rhythm in the elusive art of living as applied to the art of living at the present time is depicted from a scientific standpoint, but with a practical element of description in which it makes it possible for the ordinary layman to understand the trend of thought of the writer.

Matter and life, according to the author, is a complete and monumental survey of the ceaseless rhythm in human beings, which seems gradually to approach some climax. In this presentation of the chaos of modern life there is a direction toward spiritual stability. In fact, one of the noteworthy features of the book is that it does not take away without supplying something instead. The style is clear and has a certain charm and will be popular, no doubt, with those who are fond of reaching and studying popular psychology.

CHILD OF THE NORTH. By Ridgwell Cullum. (George H. Doran Co., New York.)

Woman's love and the lust for gold form the high lights of this entertaining story of the great Northern wilderness. The primitive emotion of a vast open space and the emphasis of selfish and unselfish love in the struggle for supremacy of human beings in the vast untamed areas of the North, make this a really readable story, quite different from many books of the same type. Of course, there is adventure and the element of mystery to give balance to the narrative.

LAST ESSAYS. By Joseph Conrad. (Doubleday Page & Co., New York.)

These 20 essays, the last work of this man who has contributed so much to modern literature, are remarkable in that they denote so clearly the diversity of the mind of Conrad. They are rich in cogent argument and noble expressions. In these essays are passages of extraordinary charm, serenity and eloquence. These more or less reminiscent essays rank with his best efforts in this direction. Those who enjoyed reading his "Notes on Life and Letters" will enjoy this collection of essays even more.

Activities of the Women's Clubs

By V-YLLA POE WILSON.

THE sterling housewifely virtues of Mary and Martha Washington and other mothers and wives of colonial and revolutionary heroes and leaders, were much the same as those which inspire activities of organized women today.

As women of the nation are called upon, as well as the men, to give an accounting of their stewardship of the 150 years of the life of this republic, it must not be forgotten that in the noble army of '76 and kindred days the "matron and the maid" were numbered among the builders of America.

The spirit of the American woman patriot of the Revolution and her ideas of thrift, service to God, her country and to her fellow mortals, still goes marching on in the woman of today. Woman's scope of individual activity has widened outside of the home and immediate community to generously populated cities and towns on account of the increased means of communication and transportation to the entire land and often to the entire world.

If Martha Washington could have attended any of the large women's conventions of this spring and summer she would have found her countrywomen discussing the same topics of thrift, industry and devotion to duty, family, health standards and educational facilities that formed topics of conversation around the Washington dining table at Mount Vernon.

The same ideals of peace, liberty, happiness and justice prevailed then as now in the hearts of American women, and, please God, they always shall prevail there.

With progress of time, women's organizations are only doing now what women from the days of the pioneers did in keeping the beacon lights burning from their vantage point by the firesides. In early days the question of woman's rights did not occur to either the men or the women, for every one took their own place in the scheme of things and the right to live was justified by service to the nation.

We all look forward to the Elysian condition dreamed of by Tennyson in Locksley Hall, "When the war drum throbs no longer, and the battle flag is furled, in the parliament of man the federation of the world."

But those of us who feel the urge of love of country and the desire to serve it can not forget that each war period has brought some great development of women. The women of the colonial and revolutionary period learned how to be good housewives, and the standards of thrift and national conservation which they have handed down from mother to daughter to the present time, without doubt. The men had to take as their slogan that necessity is the mother of invention and put their minds on how to feed so many soldiers, and the women on so many supplies to make garments from materials without waste, and to conserve all ingredients for food and clothing as far as possible. Countless are the stories of the economies of Mary and Martha Washington, who, we can not but feel as mother and wife of the first President and Father of his country, had much to do in developing a character, which is a composite ideal of what an American gentleman and patriot should be, even through the trying ordeal of looking backward 150 years and more.

Out of the torches and bonfires which followed the Declaration of Independence, the roar of muzzle-loaders, the cannon and the shrapnel which have marked successive wars of this nation, an integral part of the liberty and union and making the world safe for democracy has been the enormous contribution these have had in the education of women and spurring them on in efforts for the country and the home in peace time as well as in war.

We can never forget that out of the civil war came the first idea of trained women war nurses under some kind of discipline. The first real firm footing the American Red Cross took toward the splendid agency for worldwide peace-time service to mankind as it is at present, was in the Spanish-American war. And in the world war there was a general mobilization of the women of the country and the world to do and to learn under the Red Cross and relief agencies of the army and navy and the government.

In fact, most of the home-betterment movements being carried on so splendidly by the great national women's organizations had their nucleus in Red Cross instruction classes and in the hospitals and hostesses houses overseas, where women learned the value of knowing just how to make a bed, how to portion out food and the dangers to national and international standards of health which lurk about every corner.

In speaking of the contribution of women pioneers of another century and this, it would not be well to omit a mention of pioneer women who come strangers to our shores, often not speaking even the language and become essential and valuable elements of the woman life of the nation.

It is only necessary to visit the Americanization schools to learn with what eagerness these women grasp the opportunity to become versed in ideals and tenets of American citizenship. One foreign woman, expressing her appreciation of the chance to learn, said that in this way she was able to keep up with her children and to know that they were really good citizens in the making, according to the ideas as pointed out in our Constitution. This was to be their land and her land and to be law-abiding and to learn and labor honestly for the future was her one goal.

These foreign women who are helping to keep the temple fires of patriotism and love of country burning, sometimes are more familiar with our Constitution and the wording of the Declaration of Independence than many native born Americans. This is the type of foreign woman whom the women's patriotic organizations are banding together. They encourage the woman of this type from the day she lands in the new land. She learns sometimes more quickly than our own people not to spell liberty and freedom l-i-c-e-n-s-e.

Women who are affiliated with political parties and great bodies of women believe that women should work in parties rather than in individual groups and are supporting the project of schools for women where the standards upon which the individual parties are based are thoroughly studied and analyzed in order that in the political campaigns the women may take a real part in aiding women voters in deciding for what national issues, and men supporting them, they wish to cast their votes.

The Republican women have held these schools to good effect during the last few years in Washington and other cities, and have received support of party leaders, many of whom have acted as lecturers at the courses.

Thursday various women's Democratic clubs of the country will open a school under leadership of Mrs. Minnie Fisher Cunningham at the Woman's National Democratic club, 820 Connecticut avenue northwest. The first class will run for ten days and there will be other classes until August 28.

The students will live at the club house and will pass their time in an intensive study of duties of Democratic women in campaigns and what the Democratic party has done and is doing and why.

The automobile is a secondary consideration along roads from Monticello, the home of Thomas Jefferson, in Virginia, to Philadelphia, for the historic gig in which the author of the Declaration of Independence used to ride from Monticello to the White House is being transported on an automobile truck to the sesquicentennial. This relic of the great Jefferson will be viewed by groups of patriotic organizations all along the way and will be safely housed in the White House stables over one night, guarded by one of Virginia's crack military organizations which will escort it all the way. This historic carriage has not been in the White House stables for 100 years.

Miss Anna C. Koerper, chairman of the staff assistants corps of the District chapter of the American Red Cross, has announced that the Braille classes held Tuesday nights at the chapter house, 16 Jackson place northwest, under direction of her corps, will suspend sessions after Tuesday until further notice. Classes and workers will resume the Braille after the summer, of course, as their product is very much needed by the war blind for whom they compile the volumes which do so much to keep these men in touch with the seeing world.

Another interesting work of the District chapter has been in the volunteer service group at Mount Vernon seminary, where undergraduates have made during the last year 246 garments for layettes to be used in relief work in this country and abroad by Red Cross agencies. The school girls were much pleased with this opportunity to be of special service and this unit of the District chapter is now planning to have the girls of that particular school each make a complete Red Cross layette during the year for which they will be given a certificate, and the time expended in this service will be counted on their hours of volunteer service.

"Jam," "jam," "jam" is the theme of a special appeal made by the District Red Cross to housewives of Washington to share some of their preserving harvest with the local Red Cross agency to fill up its "Jam and Jelly Closet" from which sweets are furnished throughout the year to world war veterans in service hospitals of Washington.

For men who have to stay in the hospital for months the fare gets very monotonous and it has been found that jams and jellies are much appreciated by the men. Two thousand jars are needed to fill the closet.

It has been suggested that the women's clubs of Washington make collections of jams and jellies from their members for this purpose. The jars should be sent to the District chapter, 16 Jackson place northwest, marked plainly as to contents, with the names and addresses of the donors, and due acknowledgment of the gift will be made.

Meetings of the auxiliary will be resumed October 16 at the Capitol Park hotel and the study course will be South America.

Miss Belle Sherwin, president of the National League of Women Voters, returned Monday from the Paris meeting of the International Woman Suffrage Alliance congress. In her reports of the convention, Miss Sherwin puts stress on the interest of women in world peace. Miss Ruth Morgan, of New York, was appointed chairman of the new peace committee.

"The United States delegates were particularly pleased by the action of the congress regarding women in industry, when the policy maintained in this country by the League of Women Voters and by the American Federation of Labor was adopted in Paris," Miss Sherwin states. "It was a victory for those who steer by facts and a blow to theorists when the congress voted that no special regulations for women's work should be imposed contrary to the wishes of the women concerned. The resolution, which followed the most spirited debate of the session, provides for special legislation for women in industrial occupations when the women want it and the facts demonstrate the need for it. The United States delegation was gratified to find this provision urged by women workers in other delegations as well as in their own.

"The resolutions of the equal morals committee, which provided that there should be no discriminations against women in law and no compulsory measures in public health regulations, were unanimously carried.

"The resolution of the committee on the nationality of married women also reflected credit upon the women of the United States. The committee rejoices in the progress made toward legislation embodying the principle that women be given the same right as men to retain or change their nationality, noting with special satisfaction the establishment of independent citizenship of married women in the United States by the act of 1922. This act was sponsored by the League of Women Voters. The resolutions of the committees on the problem of the unmarried mother were similar to the subjects for study in the program of the National League of Women Voters while recommendations of the committee on family allowances are for us in the United States only an academic question.

"A conspicuous and real achievement of the congress was the gradual development of solidarity among the women present. This may have been due to the practicability with which the women regarded the questions before them. In spite of backgrounds and conditions of infinite variety in India, Egypt, Australia, Europe and the Americas, opinions in the main were formed and defended with constant reference to facts and to actual experience. Theorists were in the minority."

The District Council of Catholic Women has suspended its general meetings for the summer. The committee on rural vacation schools will be active, and is conducting religious vacation schools at Glymont, Solomons Island, and La Plata. NOTES OF THE D. A. R.

Mrs. Alexander Ennis Patton, national D. A. R. officer in charge of Washington house, on the Street of '76, at the sequicentennial exposition in Philadelphia, has reported to the president general, Mrs. Alfred J. Brosseau, that she has completed decorating and furnishing this replica of the first White House in Philadelphia, and that its doors will be opened as headquarters for members of the national society, Daughters of the American Revolution, visiting the sesquicentennial from the first day of American Independence week, beginning tomorrow, until the close of the exposition, November 30, 1926.

No formal opening of the house is planned, owing to the fact that Daughters of the American Revolution in every community and in the foreign countries where there is a chapter of the society, will be holding local celebrations during American Independence week in accordance with the official plan of the sesquicentennial of American independence and the Thomas Jefferson centennial commission authorized by act of Congress and appointed by the President to insure a nation-wide observance of the week which marks the sesquicentennial of the adoption of the Declaration of Independence.

Mrs. Brosseau, president general of the N. S. D. A. R., has selected Patriot's day tomorrow for the official opening of the daughters' celebration of American Independence, with exercises to be held in Memorial Continental hall. A historic pageant will be given by the District of Columbia D. A. R. on the east steps of the Capitol in cooperation with the Sons of the American Revolution and the community center department of the District of Columbia public school system at the close of the week.

Mrs. Brosseau plans to take an active part in subsequent collaborations at D. A. R. headquarters at the sesquicentennial, however, and will be there next Monday, when it is hoped that President and Mrs. Coolidge will make a call there on the occasion of their official visit to the exposition.

Though not one brick was left upon another of the original house in which Washington, as President of the United States, lived in Philadelphia, the women's committee of the sesquicentennial, cooperating with the American Institute of Architects and encouraged by the sesquicentennial board, Mayor Kendrick, chairman, has succeeded in reproducing it "measure for measure."

With the exterior completed, Mrs. Patton and her committee of Pennsylvania daughters, acting for the national society, took over the task of furnishing and decorating the interior as it was when George Washington and his wife lived there as the first couple in the land.

When President and Mrs. Coolidge cross the threshold they will step into the very atmosphere of the home life of their distinguished predecessors, and if it happens to be around afternoon tea time, the immortal George and his wife, impersonated "true to life" by a D. A. R. and a S. A. R., will pass them some "big pound cake and a glass of fruit vinegar," the kind that great-great-grandomther used to make.

High street, of old Philadelphia, which the woman's committee of the sesquicentennial exposition has so accurately reproduced, was almost 100 years old before the average main streets of the country were thought of. It was first to be paved, first to be cleaned by municipal order, and first to be lighted by permanent street lamps at regular intervals. And still it had hitching posts. To one of these posts, Thomas Jefferson tied the horse that drew the gig in which he was wont to make the trip from his home at Monticello, Charlottesville, Va., to the Federal capital, at Philadelphia.

GIRL SCOUT NOTES

Goldenrod troop 1 (Miss Julia Palmer, captain), held its regular meeting Thursday in the community hall in Potomac Heights. Games were followed by patrol corners. After that one of the members was invested as a tenderfoot scout. Songs were sung and games played, followed by Goodnight Circle. Scribe, Marjory Logan.

Pine Cone troop of Glen Echo held its meeting Friday at 7 p. m. The horseshoe formation was used for opening ceremonies. After patrol corners, games were played. Capt. Palmer suggested a picnic for Friday. The Goodnight circle was held. Scribe, Emily Houghton.

Red Wing troop 11 (Mrs. Dowling, captain, Mrs. Perry, lieutenant), met Wednesday, in the Sherwood community hall. The business meeting was held, and the first issue of the G. S. Chatterbox, the troop paper, was distributed. Owning to an error, Harriet Luce was invested as a tenderfoot scout. A moving picture will be given for the benefit of the troop. Scribe, Isabel Leisinger.

Troop 12 had a party as its closing meeting of the season Friday night. The girls made little bags in which ten beans were put. Then if any one said "yes" or "no," in answering a question, she had to forfeit a bean. Drawing beans through straws was another game played. Capt. Bagby talked about the day camp, and many of the girls are planning to go. Next week the troop will go to North Beach to visit one of the scouts. There are now ten second-class scouts in the troop. Nadine Stacy, Virginia Shankland, Elsie MacDonald, Rhode Doyle, Virginia Hammerly, Elizabeth Parks, Evelyn Walcott, Marion MacDonald, Mary Parks and Alma Lansman.

A treasure hunt was held by Troop 13 on Saturday as a celebration of Marion Wheeler's eaglet award. The hunt began at the parish, where the scouts were joined by those of Troop 23. The scouts were divided into groups, and clews given out. An excitig chase followed, in which about eight miles of territory were covered. The hunt ended in the woods near the marker of the old District line. Capt. Bonell provided the picnic luncheon. Capt. Bonell spoke of the splendid work of Annie Caljouw. Scribe, Ellen Anderson.

Troop 15, Red Rose, held its regular meeting on Thursday at the Wallach school. They divided into groups according to the next tests to be taken, which are signaling, knot tying, and first class. Next Friday is the last meeting of the troop for the summer, but hikes are planned for the vacation. Scribe, Vivian Watts.

The meeting of Troop 24 was called to order at the Hebrew institute Wednesday at 7:30. Miss Betty Adams, the captain, was in charge. The following members of the troop will receive their second class badges: Bertha Keyser, Henrietta C. Chornikoff, Rose Futrowsky, Ruth Morgenstern, Lily Werber, Hilda Farbman, and Rose Okun. The good-night circle followed. Scribe, Rose Okun.

At its last regular meeting for the summer, last week, Troop 28, Miss Eveline Gleaves, captain, had a party. After formation games were played. Margaret Wright and Estelle Bayne were enrolled as tenderfoot scouts, and Betty Friedell, Mona Laurene, Mary Johnston and Ann Johnston, as second-class scouts. The following received attendance stars: Margaret Clark, gold star, and Carol Carpenter, Betty Friedell, Margaret Hamburger, Mona Laurene, Frances Marie Smith, Dorothy Townsend, Lucille Weber and Pauline Siebert, silver stars. Scribe, Sidney Jones.

Pine Cone Troop 34 met Thursday at the home of the captain, Miss Vera Lawrence, and 21 members were present. The usual ceremonies were followed by patrol corners. The girls then went out on the hill and an interpatrol "water-boiling contest" was held. Each patrol leader instructed her girls as to what wood to get, then the contest was on. The fires were made without paper and in the case of patrols 1 and 2, with only one match. Patrol 2 succeeded in causing the water to boil first. The members in this patrol were: Josephine Rankin, leader; Ruth Lott, Alice Williams, Elizabeth Harmon, Mabelle Hering and Gertrude Tew. Patrol 1, with Gladys Acton, Catherine Scheytt, Helen Earnshaw and Laura Wolfe, and later Linda Swain and May Lot, was second.

The girls then poured the water on their fires and cleared away all remains and a poppy game of "crows and cranes" was played, followed by Hindoo tag. It was decided that the last regular meeting of the troop for the summer will be held Wednesday at 3 p. m. A rummage sale will be held to raise funds for sending some of the girls to camp. Among the girls passing parts of tests were Ruth Lott, Mabelle Hering, Anna Lee and Virginia Edge. Gladys Acton and Alice Williams have completed their second-class test. Scribe Helen Earnshaw.

Troop 47, Mrs. Peters, captain; Margaret James, scribe, met Friday evening at the home of the captain. The girls preparing for their stargazer test wrote the test and were examined by Mr. Peters. Beds were made up on the roof of the garage. At 9 o'clock the first diagram of the heavens was made. Then all "turned in," but the excitement of sleeping in the open under the stars kept all the troop awake. At 12 o'clock, the second diagram was made, and after the good-night song, all were soon asleep. At 3 o'clock, the call came, and after much coaxing on the part of Capt. Peters, every one got up and had some hot cocoa. The sky began to cloud over and though the big dipper was partially visible, the full diagram could not be made. When the dawn came, all were so wide awake that games were played until it was time to go home for breakfast. The troop is planning to meet once each week to sew for the Needlework guild. The girls who took the stargazer test are Barbara Deskam, Leora Sanford, Margaret James, Margaret Post, Bertha Shafer, Charlotte Hazard, Eleanor McRae and Harriet Clark.

Troop 62, Mrs. Olive Ross, captain, met at the Cleveland Park Congregational church. Classes were held in tenderfoot and second-class work. The following girls have been enrolled as tenderfoot scouts: Caroline Bell, Margaret Grayson, Margaret Avery, Louise Shoemaker, and Nelda Waldecker. BATH IN EVERY HOME ESSENTIAL, EXPERTS IN SANITATION HOLD Shower Considered Superior to Tub, Especially in Public Houses.

PERIOD OF CLEANLINESS BEGAN FEW YEARS AGO

General Use of Bathtubs in Homes Started About 1867, It Is Believed.

At a mothers' union housing conference in London, March 11, 1925, Dame Beatrix Lyall quoted the following astounding information from a gossip sheet of the time of Queen Elizabeth: "The queen hath built herself a bath, where she doth bathe herself once a month, whether she require it or no." Amazing at the first gasp to us who live in the twentieth century, remarks Mary A. Clarke in an article; but on second thought not so very surprising when we consider that the first bathtub in the United States was built in Cincinnati in 1842. It was made of mahogany, lined with sheet lead, and was exhibited at a Christmas party. The next day the local papers denounced it as "a luxurious and undemocratic vanity." Then the medical men took the matter up and pronounced this bathtub a menace to health. In the light of recent investigations, their opposition might be called farsighted, indeed.

"In 1843 Philadelphia undertook by public ordinance to prohibit all bathing between November 1 and March 15. Two years later Boston made bathing unlawful except when prescribed by a physician, and in Virginia about this time bathtubs were taxed $30 a year. The family of the writer were, about 1854, the proud possessors of a bathtub, there being no other in the immediate circle of their acquaintance. It was a huge affair, higher at one end than the other, in shape resembling the galleons in which Columbus sailed to discover America. A large room was set apart for its use, and the tub, of wood, painted white, with zinc lining, was installed near the window.

Tub Filled Through Hose.

A pipe from the bung hole passed through the wall to a drain pipe, and thus the water found its way out. The filling was just as primitive. A stout rubber hose, secured at the window sill was lowered to the yard and attached to the hydrant, this furnished the water supply, supplemented by several pails of hot water from the kitchen. Needless to say the tub was in most frequent use only in the summer. It was the delight of the young children of the family and their friends, four of whom at a time often splashed around in wild frolic, while their elders had no thought of insanitation.

"Just when bathtubs became common the writer can not say, but in 1867 all the houses in Philadelphia, which she can remember were supplied with tub and plumbing. The progress in 60 years has been most wonderful, for now even the humblest four-roomed house has its immaculate porcelain tub, while twin tubs, sunken tubs, needle and shower baths abound.

England Slow to Adopt Plumbing.

"In Europe modern plumbing has come into use much more slowly than in our country, although the English have long been familiar with the comfort of the portable tub, made of rubber cloth, suspended on a frame, and capable of being rolled up snugly on one's travels. Yet our beloved late Ambassador to Great Britain, in one of his charming letters, said of the English: 'They don't really like bath rooms yet. They prefer great tin tubs, and they use bowls and pitchers when a bathroom is next door.'

"In France the bathtub was much in vogue back at the time of the French revolution, being used a good deal for the 'continuous bath' in the treatment of fevers and other conditions. Most of us are familiar with Aviat's picture of Charlotte Corday stabbing Marat to death as he sat in his bathtub. This was in 1793.

"In one of her books Mme. Lillie De Hegermann-Lindencrone, born and bred in Rouen, records that while stationed in Paris in 1889, the poet Rostand told her that when he was writing 'L'Aiglon' he was almost crazy 'to be alone with his thoughts.' His head was bursting with ideas; but he could not easily deny himself to his friends. The slightest interruption sent him into 'spasms of delire.' So he took refuge in his bathtub and wrote there all day."

Shower Bath More Sanitary.

Tests have proved that the shower bath is much more sanitary than the tub and that it should replace the tub in dormitories, boarding houses, hotels and probably many private homes. At the annual meeting of the American Association for Promoting Hygiene and Public Baths, in Jersey City in May, 1923, standards for shower baths were submitted in detail by a committee on shower bath standards. These were broadcast and criticism invited. We read further:

"A method of disinfecting public bathing beaches is described as follows: 'A chlorin apparatus is mounted in a motorboat which cruises back and forth outside the lifelines at the beach. Water thus treated was found to contain less than 100 bacteria per cubic centimeter, whereas untreated water totaled 175,000 per cubic centimeter.

"Stovall and Nichols, in the March issue of the American Journal of Public Health, suggest the desirability of liquid chlorin residuum in swimming pools to render them innocuous to any added pollution. At the University of Wisconsin renovation by refiltration and chlorination has proved entirely satisfactory, the water being renewed only every four months or at longer intervals. The pool is equipped with pressure filters, centrifugal pump for recirculation of water, automatic heat control, and a chlorinator of the pulsating type. Bathers are required to take a soap and water shower bath before entering the pool in addition to a foot douche immediately before entering. A vacuum cleaner is used weekly to remove all sediment. As to the possibility of making the water sterile by ultraviolet ray the authors say: 'From what is known concerning the activity of rays absorbed it seems that if it were possible to supercharge a water to such an extent as to render it bactericidal, then its use for bathing, especially near the charging tubes, possibly might be somewhat harmful to the eyes.'

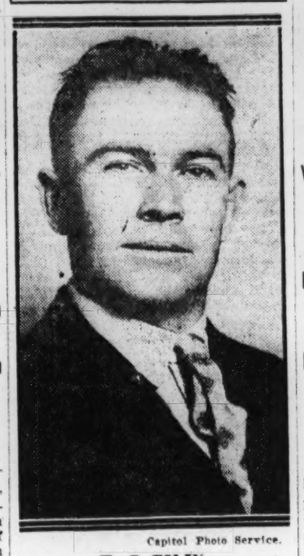

Tests at Columbia University.

"Under the auspices of Teachers' college, Columbia university, a test was recently made of dormitory bathtubs used by groups of eight or ten persons each. Cotton swabs were rubbed over (1) the edge of the drain or vent; (2) over the botton of the tub; (3) on the sides around the water-line. One hundred and thirty tubs were tested After incubation the cultures from 39 of these tubs gave positive evidence of bacterium coli, which was apparent in 57 samples.

"In testing cleansing agents for these same tubs, ammonia in full strength from freshly opened bottles failed to kill the coli in sixteen out of sixteen trials. Kerosene failed in four out of four trials; but chlorinated lime killed the coli in twelve out of twelve trials; even when solutions seven days old were used. This was determined to be the best disinfectant, both on account of its low cost and the rapidity with which it acts.

"Thus the science of the twentieth century has removed the fear of the nineteenth. Nevertheless, the prevention of infection is still the obligation of every nurse."

PERSHING MAY BECOME COMMANDER OF LEGION

General Would Then Lead the Members to Convention in Paris Next Year.

FREE TO ACCEPT POST

Indianapolis, June 26 (By A. P.).—The four-starred banner of "Black Jack" Pershing may again fly along the roads of France at the head of a peace-time army that went to battle with him ten years before.

Groups within the American Legion are planning to elect Gen. John J. Pershing national commander of the organization at the Philadelphia convention this fall. If successful, he who directed the American expeditionary force would lead the legionnaires in their pilgrimage to France next year for the veterans' annual convention.

Elevating Pershing to the highest office in the legion has been the ambition of influential members for several years, officials in national headquarters here declare. His name first was mentioned at New Orleans in 1923, but at that time he was chief of staff and wholly engrossed in reorganizing the army.

Again at Milwaukee and Omaha, in the succeeding two years, Pershing's name was mentioned. He still was busy with government affairs. Now, they say, Pershing may be in better position to devote his time to legion affairs.

There are several obstacles to advancing Pershing, however, Legion officials point out. It is known he will not enter a contest for the office, nor will he permit his name to be used if it will divide the legion. There also is a feeling that Pershing typifies the professional soldier, and that his election might indicate the general staff was attempting to exert an influence in the organization.

Pershing is said to be intrigued by the thought of leading the same men in a peace-time venture. He sees it as a means of improving relations between the United States and Europe.

Legion leaders could not assure the general that he would be without opposition, as every State delegation is entitled to present a candidate. It is considered likely that a caucus will be held the night before the convention opens on October 11, and at that time an effort made to induce all States to waive their right to nominate so that Pershing's name would be the only one to go before the delegates.

The general is a member of a Washington post and the District of Columbia would offer him.

TROUBLE IS AVOIDED BY PROPER HEATING SYSTEM IN HOMES

Vapor, Steam and Vacuum Equally Good Where Temperature Changes Rapidly.

HOT WATER HELD BEST IN MEDIUM RADIATION

Radiator Heat Is Preferred Where House Is Exposed to Blasts of Wind.

Constant trouble in heating your home may result from failure to properly select and install the system in the first place, or from failure to properly operate the plant after installation.

To meet rapid changes of temperature, the vapor, steam and vacuum systems are equally good, for they respond quickly. On the other hand, hot water, being slower to heat and to cool, is better suited to climatic conditions in which the temperature does not show too rapid variation.

If your name is situated in a location exposed to sweeping blasts of wind, then radiator heat will be found most convenient and effective, for such heat can be better controlled, from the inside, independent of outside atmospheric conditions.

Ranking as fuel consumers, with equally intelligent firing, the vapor system stands lowest, with hot water next in line; the steam system follows. Thus the vapor system is less expensive when it comes to buying fuel.

When selecting the type of heating to use, there are many other considerations to be regarded, however, beyond the single one of fuel consumption. Many of these are subjects upon which only expert opinion is of value. It is well, therefore, to seek and follow the advice of a reputable heating contractor—one whose experience and knowledge covers all forms of heating plants—when deciding upon the type and size of heating equipment for any building.

By modern practice stoves are practically discarded, but the open fireplace often remains as an ornamental decoration to beautify the interior and in some cases as an auxiliary to the major system. The fireplace can be used in the spring and autumn of the year to remove the chill from the atmosphere when it is still too moderate to start a fire in the regular heating plant.

SAMPLE 528 BOTTLES OF WINE; DRINK NONE

Paris, June 26 (By A. P.).—Sixty-six Paris butlers sampled 528 bottles of the finest white wines of France without swallowing a drop in the wine-judging contest at the Professional School for Hotel Men.

Hundreds of bottles of Vouvray, Graves, Chablis, Pouilly, Alsace, Meursault, Cotes-du-Rhone and Montrachet were arranged before the butlers, who will instruct the next generation of American tourists in the art of wine drinking, in groups of eight, without labels or other indication of origin.

Wine judging is an altogether different affair from country fair pie contests or preserve judging in America. Each wine contestant was supposed to name the origin and date of each bottle. But to swallow a single drop would be enough to spoil his palate for judging. Instead, a sip was taken from each bottle, held briefly in the mouth and then disposed of in a box full of sawdust. A few puffs at a cigarette prepared the way for the next sip.

MODERN PLUMBING LIFTS BURDEN FROM FARMERS

Water Supply System Can Be Obtained as Cheaply as Automobile.

FIRE HAZARD IS REDUCED

It is a far cry from the days when the first people carried water in stone jars or in the skins of animals. Equally remote now, seem the days of the coonskin cap and the old flintlock rifle. The last century has seen many developments that have made life more profitable and enjoyable.

Our great grandfathers ploughed with oxen—harvested with scythes, and threshed with flails. Our great grandmothers ran spinning wheels and carded wool by hand, cooked at an open fire, and carried water in wooden buckets from the well or spring. What a change is seen where the farmer is intelligent and progressive.

The development of farm water systems has lifted a heavy burden from the shoulders of everyone on the farm. It means freedom from backtiring drudgery for the housewife, to have running water in the house for every need. Out doors, it means better livestock and greater profits; with less time spent in monotonous chores. Of great importance, too, is the real fire protection it brings.

A good water system can be purchased and installed for about the price of an ordinary automobile. The upkeep is much less. It is indeed a long stride from water carried in jars and skins to running water on the farm piped into every building—every room if desired. Modern manufacturing efficiency has made it possible at a cost surprisingly low.

Mexico Traffic Police Often Shoot Walkers

Mexico City, June 26 (By A. P.).—Local newspapers complain that Mexico City traffic cops are too loose on the trigger. They urge the police to quit shooting at violators of traffic laws.

The objection is that the public is doubly imperiled. The pedestrian is not only apt to be run down by automobiles, but he also hazards being killed by a police bullet intended for a motorist.

The newspapers say several persons have been killed in recent weeks by shots directed by police at traffic law violators.

Cheap Plumbing Fixtures

The surface of plumbing fixtures requires a finish as smooth and as impervious as a piece of high grade china. Otherwise they cannot stay sanitary. The slightest defect, crack, blister or roughness, will cause grease and germs to accumulate.

Defective goods are never bargains. They often cause loss of health, as well as money. "Seconds" or "used" fixtures may look all right and cost a little less at first, but they soon become unsanitary and unsightly. Then they have to be ripped out and replaced. Besides the expense of installing the new fixtures, all that was saved, is lost.

Members of this association sell only FIRST QUALITY fixtures - guaranteed - installed by competent workmen - at prices within the reach of all.

Be Safe Instead of Sorry

Expert knowledge of these things is the only real safeguard. Members of this association are trained in these requirements. They guarantee their workmanship and material and deal in high grade wares only.

PROCESS OF MAKING TUNGSTEN IN DUCTILE FORM IS EXPLAINED

RESULTANT POWDER IS PRESSED INTO BARS

Then It Is Made Into Wire by Gradual Reduction in Swaging Machine.

F. C. KELLEY.

Research Laboratory of the General Electric Co.

It is not my purpose to give you the historical facts connected with the discovery of tungsten, and the various chemical methods of separating it from its ores, for time does not permit. I simply wish to convey some idea of the method used to produce it in its ductile form, and its application to industry.

Although little use had been made of this metal up until the time it was obtained in its ductile form, it was by no means rare. Deposits of its ores occur in many parts of the world, and especially in the United States, Portugal, British India and South America. The chief ones are wolframite and iron and manganese tungstate, sheelite, a calcium tungstate, and stolzite, a lead tungstate.

The pure oxide of tungsten is obtained from the ore by chemical separation. It is canary yellow in color and in its finely divided state resembles flour. This yellow powder is loaded into porcelain tube, electric resistance furnaces, through which hydrogen is passed. The temperature and flow of hydrogen gas are carefully regulated, for upon these conditions depend the character of the reduced metal. The furnace is heated gradually to a bright yellow heat, causing hydrogen to combine with the oxygen of tungstic oxide forming water which vaporizes leaving the pure uncrystalline metal behind.

Metal Is Sintered.

The hydrogen-reduced metal powder is next pressed in a mold under hydraulic pressure in the form of bars. If a bar is handled at this stage, it will break under its own weight, so it is carefully transferred to a slab of molybdenum, tungsten, or some highly refractory material, and refired in hydrogen at nearly a white heat for half an hour. This high temperature sinters the metal so that the bar can be handled without breakage. It is next clamped between two water-cooled clamps in a metal treating bottle, and a heavy current is passed through it. This heats the bar to a dazzling white heat, and causes it to sinter still more.

It is now strong, but not ductile, and a sharp blow with a hammer will break it. The bar may now be rolled into sheets or hammered into rods or wire by means of swaging machines. The process depends upon the use to which the metal is to be put. The treatment is as follows: The bar is heated in a hydrogen electric resistance furnace to nearly a white heat. It is then pulled out of the furnace by means of tongs and inserted quickly into the swaging machine. It is immediately withdrawn and reheated. This time the opposite end is inserted into the swager. A smaller set of dies are now put into the machine for the next operation. This heating, hammering and gradual reduction in the size of the dies continues until the bar is worked down into wire. The bar is not allowed to become cold during the swaging operation, because it would break up. The temperature of working, however, is gradually decreased with its size. When the bar has been worked down into a long wire, it is fed automatically through the machine by rolls, being heated by a gas flame just before it goes into the swager. It is reduced in this way until the diameter becomes about one-half that of the lead in a pencil.

At this stage it is tough and ductile at room temperature, and can be bent cold without breaking. The process of reduction to still smaller diameters is accomplished by drawing through diamond dies. The wire is drawn at a dull red heat at first by heating in a gas furnace as before, but as it becomes smaller the heat is gradually reduced, so that it will not burn the fine wire. The amount of reduction for each pass through the die also becomes less as the size decreases. By this method, wire five ten-thousandths of an inch in diameter, or smaller, can be drawn.

Grains Are Formed.

If the desired form of the metal should not be wire, the highly sintered bars are rolled hot, just as they were when swaged. Metal sheets rolled in this manner furnish the material from which a variety of products are made.

The method of making ductile tungsten is very different from the processes used to produce other metal. It is never melted in any part of the process like iron, copper or nickel, but is made by pressing finely divided powder and heating to a temperature several hundred degrees below the melting point. During sintering at such a high temperature the individual particles grow together, forming grains. The bar then actually develops a crystalline structure which may be seen with the naked eye if it is broken. The size of the grains depend upon the temperature and time of heating. The grains of a sintered bar when worked hot into wire are elongated, giving it a fibrous structure. If the wire is then reheated to a high temperature the fibers undergo a change and form new equiaxed grains.

Ductile tungsten is too hard and tough to be machined with tools, so other methods are used to obtain it in the desired form. Discs are punched from hot sheets, and various other forms are made by forging the hot sintered bars. Heavy sheets may also be sheared while hot to get the required shape. This metal has some very unique properties. It is almost unattacked by the common acids, such as hydrochloric, nitric and sulphuric of any strength, either hot or cold, and is not attacked by alkali solutions. It is also unaffected by damp atmospheric conditions. The tensile strength of small wires runs as high as 650,000 pounds per square inch, or several times that of steel. It has the highest melting point of all metals, and a weight exceeding twice that of an equal volume of iron.

Useful as Filaments.

The high melting point, tensile strength, low vapor pressure, under the best vacuum conditions, and some other qualities, make it a very desirable metal for lamp filaments and cathodes for radio and X-ray tubes. These have proved to be its most important uses. It is also extensively used in the electrical industry as a contact material where electrical circuits have to be made and broken frequently, as in magnetos, distributors of automobiles, and voltage regulators. A very valuable use has been made of it as a target in X-ray tubes. Phonograph needles are also produced with a tungsten point. Its use as a heating unit in tube form, and as a heater-winding, has been of very great value in electric furnaces, where the metal is protected from oxidation at high temperatures by a vacuum or an atmosphere of hydrogen. A temperature of 25,000° degrees C. can be obtained in a few minutes in the tungsten-tube furnace, while in the resistance type, the temperature is limited only by the melting point of the refractory material upon which it is wound.

Tungsten has also taken a prominent place in the field of metallurgy. Alloyed with iron and cobalt it is used as a permanent magnet material. Alloys of tungsten with iron, and iron-chromium-manganese are used in the production of "high speed" steels. Tools made from these alloys are capable of taking heavy cuts from steel at high rates of speed, thus saving much time and money for industries using them. Much heat is generated in such an operation, but still the tool maintains its cutting edge. Carbon tool steels would lose their cutting properties under such conditions in a very short time.

Compounds of tungsten are used as fire-proofing materials, for weighting silks and in the arts for producing bronze colors on glass and porcelain.

There is probably no other material, after being obtained in a workable form, that has had such a rapid rise to industrial importance as tungsten.

VESPER HOUR IN EVENING

The fourth Sunday after Trinity service of the Washington Cathedral will be preached in the open air at the foot of the peace cross at 4 p. m. today by the Rev. William Devries, canon and counselor of Washington. The music, under the direction of Edgar Priest, organist and choir leader, will be broadcast by WCAP.

The services of First Church of Christ Scientists will also be on the air at 11 o'clock, subject, "Christian Science."

Other features to be broadcast during the evening by WCAP, WEAF, and other stations include the Capitol theater (New York) program, and the Atwater Kent Radio Hour.

The "Vesper Hour of Music" to be broadcast by WCAP, beginning at 8:45 p. m., is presented through the courtesy of the American Drug Co., of Baltimore.

The symphonic concert of the Whitfall Anglo-Persians will be broadcast on Friday evening, July 2, through WEAF, WCAP and other stations.

On Wednesday evening, the Ipana Troubabours, under the direction of "Smiling" S. C. Lanin, will give a special program of familiar waltzes beginning at 8 o'clock through WEAF and WCAP.

The program will open with the usual playing of "Smiles" and will continue with such favorites as "Merry Widow Waltz," "Missouri Waltz," Aloha Oe," "Blue Danube" and others.

In addition to the waltzes, Lucien Schmidt, the Ipana cello soloist, will play Rubinstein's "Melody in F" and the ensemble will play one march entitled "Chimes of Liberty."

Starting the following Wednesday evening and continuing through July and August the programs of the Ipana Troubadours will continue for one-half hour, but will begin as usual at 8 o'clock and will be heard through the same stations.

LARGEST LAKE TO BE USED

Five hundred and thirty billion gallons of water from the world's largest artificial lake are about to go to work in the service of the people of Alabama. This volume of water will soon be backed up behind a new dam 1,200 feet long and 150 feet high on the Tallapoosa river at Cherokee Bluffs in the heart of the State. The weight of controlled flow from the reservoir behind dam will run three water turbines driving generators that will produce 126,000 horsepower of electric energy. A fourth generating unit may be added later. This new power development goes to work some time in July. More than 40,000 acres will be covered, and the lake rim will measure 750 miles.

Electricity in Office Buildings.

An average 20-story office building requires as much electricity for its lamps, elevators, and equipment as does an entire town of 1,000 inhabitants.

LARGEST FRENCH DAM.

Provides for Electrification of Paris-Eguedos Railway.

The newest and probably the largest hydro-electric development in France is the Massif Central dam with its power plan capable of generating 75,000 kilowatts of electrical energy. This project, just now going into service, supplies the French departments of Creuse and Indre and provides for the electrification of 200 miles of railway from Paris to Eguedos. The dam is 190 feet high and the lake it creates holds more than 13,000,000,000 gallons of water. It is on the River Creuse near Eguzon. Judged by European standards, it is a huge power development. In this country a 75,000 kilowatt generating plant is considered to be of only moderate size.

D. A. R. HEAD SPEAKS IN POST RADIO HOUR TOMORROW EVENING

Mrs. A. J. Brosseau Will Explain Sesqui Services of Her Society.

POWHATAN ORCHESTRA WILL GIVE PROGRAM

Duncan Thomson to Sing; Maj. C. F. Ferris Will Contribute.

The semimonthly Washington Post program will be broadcast from station WCAP, the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., starting at 6 o'clock tomorrow night. The single address of the program will be made in explanation of the sesquicentennial celebration to be conducted by Daughters of the American Revolution in D. A. R. hall. The speaker will be Mrs. Alfred J. Brosseau, newly elected president general of the D. A. R.

The hour will start with a talk for children by Elisabeth E. Poe of The Post staff and will conclude with orchestra music played by the Powhatan Roof orchestra, John Slaughter, violinist and director. Other members of the orchestra, which has several Victor records to its credit, are J. Heitmuller, piano; Al Senior, drums; Lew Davie, banjo; Vincent Carlin, saxophone; Fred Thompson, saxophone; A. Caprio, saxophone and Lew Bates, bass horn.

Lauder Songs Avoided.

There will be solos of Scotch songs and recitations by Duncan Thomson, ccompanied at the piano by Edna MacCauley. Mr. Thomson has avoided the selection of Harry Lauder songs in his repertoire, hence the radio audience will hear songs of the heather entirely new to many listeners.

A Hungarian love song, recitation of the poem "Flanders Fields" and an Italian baseball story will be contributed to the program by Maj. Charles F. Ferris, who has entitled his presentation for the evening: "Song, Poem and Story."

First Power Plant Had 400 Consumers

The old Pearl street station in New York city was the first electric power plant to sell current. It began business September 4, 1882, with customers enough to use 400 incandescent lamps. One of the first subscribers was the firm of Drexel, Morgan & Co., predecessors to the present Morgan banking house. The first year's business saw an income of about $10,000 a month.

From this beginning the central station industry grew in 42 years to cover the country with plants and property valued at $7,500,000,000 and with an annual revenue of $1,470,000,000.

PATRIOTIC PROGRAM OVER WAHG JULY 5

Independence Day to Be Honored by Synchrophase Ensemble.

In honor of Independence day the Synchrophase Instrumental Ensemble will program many patriotic numbers at WAHG, New York, from 7 to 8 o'clock Monday night, July 5. Chief announcer and program director, Paul Dumont, of the Grebe station, will tell the stories of many of the songs. For instance, how Julia Ward Howe wrote "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," after a visit to the camp of Gen. George B. McClellan in Virginia during the civil war. Also something about Henry Clay Work, the Connecticut Yankee, who wrote such great war songs as "Kingdom Comin'," "Babylon Is Fallen" and "Marching Through Georgia."

Then some almost forgotten detail about Franklin Fyles, leader of the orchestra at the John Street theater, who wrote and played "Hail Columbia," for President George Washington when he attended the John Street theater on the night of April 25, 1789. Mr. Dumont will also tell of the Chicago composer, George F. Root, who wrote "The Battle Cry of Freedom."

'Twas during the dark days of 1861 when President Lincoln issued his second call for troops—the 90-day men had served their time. Bull Run and its rout had shown the world that the "Boys in Gray," under "Marse Robert," were first-class fighting men. It was hard to get men to enlist. George Root read the call and with heart aflame wrote the words and music. This song was first sung from the old courthouse steps in Chicago by Jules and Frank Lombard.

Over the heads of the crowd rang the voices of the two brothers: "The Union Forever! Hurrah, Boys, Hurrah!" The crowd caught the refrain and the music welled onward until the whole North caught the inspiration. The "boys" responding, and "springing to the call," carried their rallying song to camp and field, many of them yielding their lives, while still "Shouting the Batle Cry of Freedom." And finally, "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean," written in Philadelphia by a young English actor, Thomas a' Becket, and sung by him from the stage of the Chestnut Street theater, in 1843, as an Englishman's tribute to "The Red, White and Blue."

Mammoth Switchboard for Chicago

ELECTRICITY BRINGS COMFORTS OF CITIES TO SUMMER HOMES

NEW ELECTRIC COOKER IS MOST ACCEPTABLE

Reflector Heaters Will Warm Chill of Rainy Days; Other First Aids.

By MILDRED NICHOLS,
Electrical Housekeeping Department, Graybar Electrical Co.

The closing of school marks the opening of summer cottages. Plans and preparations for migrating to the seashore or mountains encroach on the highly important graduation festivities. Naturally, the young folks are hilarious—no more school—long weeks of vacation—days of fishing, hiking, tennis and golf.

Freedom and a general letdown for everybody—but mother.

No matter how rough and ready the summer home may be, there are always three meals to cook, clean clothes to plan for and fresh household linens to provide.

Camping is really more difficult than normal living, for the one who has the housekeeping responsibilities.

Conveniences Are Missing.

Generally, many of the modern conveniences are missing—running water, laundry tubs and up-to-date cooking equipment, especially, being prominent by their absence. Fortunately, electricity has already made its appearance in the newer summer colonies and wherever power lines are being extended to outlying districts, owners are taking advantage of the opportunity to increase the value of their property by installing electricity.

With electricity as a background, it is comparatively easy to bring city comforts and up-to-date methods of housekeeping to the summer cottage.

It is possible to do without many things, but it is impossible to do without food, and if the summer cottage is not within easy distance of bakeries and delicatessen shops all the more cooking falls on mother. There is no place on earth where the new electric cookers—the-kind that roast, bake, stew and steam (and all this from your regular electric circuit)—are as acceptable as in the summer home. In the first place, it is the coolest way imaginable to cook. Secondly, mother can start the dinner, go fishing with the rest of the crowd and come back to a well-cooked meal.

Cooked at the Table.

Breakfasts, light lunches and suppers can be cooked right at the table out on the cool porch if you have the right selection of table appliances—a percolator, toaster, table stove and waffle iron. If there is no electric outlet on the porch an extension cord terminating in a triple table tap can be run from the living room outlet to the porch table.

And, of course, an electric iron is indispensable. With it you can iron on the shadiest part of the porch, where it is cool and breezy.

The question of clean linens ceases to be a problem, because, even though you may not have laundry tubs, an electric clothes washer by itself can do the whole job.

Some of the Comforts.

So much for necessities—now for comforts. Fans for hot days when even the mountain or sea breezes refuse to stir. Reflector heaters for the unescapable rainy days when a depressing chill creeps into every corner of the cottage. Immersion heaters—that make a glass of boiling water available within a few minutes. Splendid for the disposition of the man who fusses and fumes over the thought of a cold shave. Heating pads—excellent to alleviate the summer scares, such as the resultant chill of Bobbie's staying too long in too cold a lake.

For some unknown reason it is almost impossible for women to just sit and think, even on a vacation. They must be doing something. Embroidering is a popular porch pastime. Many women would much rather be spending this time making just one more cool porch dress or new curtains, but sewing by hand is too tedious. Here's where a portable sewing machine would come into its own. Place it on any table, connect it to an outlet, carry it into the house when you're through.

Practically all of these first aids to summer comforts are portable. So just include with your other portable luggage any of these appliances that you may have been using in your city home.

Attractions by WLWL.

Beginning Monday, WLWL, New York, will broadcast 27 different attractions on four nights, up to and including Thursday. Twenty of these numbers will be musical, including vocal periods, string ensembles, quartets and violin soloists. The remaining seven will be nonmusical, including the Study club, talks and other educational material. The proportion thus is 7 nonmusical numbers to 20 musical, or about 75 per cent musical to 25 per cent nonmusical.

Not one of the 75 per cent musical numbers is jazz. There is at present not one jazz orchestra playing from WLWL.

Research Cuts Cost of Lamps.

In his early and tireless experiments to make the incandescent electric lamp, Thomas A. Edison tested over 6,000 kinds of fibrous materials while searching for the best thing from which to make filaments. Steady experiment since those early days has each year made lamps cheaper and of longer life.

Cunningham Tubes Used in Polar Trip

Arrival of Commander Richard E. Byrd in New York has occasioned pride in American polar achievement. In the selection of radio apparatus, as in selection of mechanical equipment, extreme care was used and the country's foremost engineers consulted.

Commander Byrd's choice of Cunningham radio tubes was the same as MacMillan's on his successful expedition last year. These tubes were employed exclusively in the equipment that made such an exceptional performance record in keeping the expedition in touch with civilization. At present the Wilkin's expedition, still in the Arctic, is using these same tubes.

RECORD BOYS TO REST FROM RADIO PROGRAMS

WGZ and WRC Stars Will Broadcast Wednesday in Closing Recital.

TO RETURN SEPTEMBER 1

The Record Boys, who have been broadcasting through WJZ and WRC, will close the season with a final program from that station at 10 o'clock Wednesday night.

Frank Kamplain, Al Bernard and Sammy Stept feel that they must have at least two months' rest this summer to prepare themselves for the fall season. The boys have promised the management of station WJZ that they will rejoin the ranks of that station's entertainers shortly after September 1.

On a postal card received from Maj. Lester D. Gardner, the editor of Aviation, by Charles W. Popenoe, manager of station WJZ, he makes the statement that WJZ was heard clearly in the ancient city of Jerusalem. The card is postmarked June 3, 1926.

Maj. Gardner is engaged in a flight covering Europe, the Near East, India and the Orient. Prior to dispatching the card to WJZ, he had just returned from Bagdad, flying over the historic cities of Babylon, Ninevah and Jerusalem. His flying mileage up to that time was 8,000 miles.

The two stars of the only Hungarian-American light opera company, Mariska Kondor, soprano, and Eugen de Medgyszay, tenor, were heard by the radio audience for the first time Friday night.

Mariska Kondor plays the leading roles in all of the productions of the popular operetta organization, has made numerous records and is known among her compatriots as "the singing nightingale of the Magyars."

9,000 H. P. ELECTRIC MOTOR COMPLETED

Largest Apparatus of Its Kind in World Is Made for Cleveland Firm.

Power so great as to stagger the imagination is often required in steel mills to overcome the tremendous resistance which ingots, bars and thick sheets of hot steel offer as they are run through mighty rolls. The largest electric motor in the world, rated at 9,000 horsepower, has just been built to meet such a demand for power in the works of the McKinney Steel Co. at Cleveland, Ohio. It will run a ten-strand continuous sheet bar bill.

Previously, the largest motors in the world were applied usually to blooming mills in steel works. These take huge ingots of white-hot steel, some of them 20 inches or more thick and weighing more than 3 tons each, and roll them down.

When an American manufacturer shipped a 7,000-horsepower motor to the Tata Iron & Steel Co. of India several years ago it was the largest motor ever built. Since then a few motors of that size have been added to the steel industry's collection of electrical giants throughout the world, but the new 9,000-horsepower motor now towers over them all.

Radio Exhibition Canceled.

Report by Eric H. Palmer, Radio Exhibition Corporation, New York State, says:

"It has been decided by the board of directors of the Radio Exhibition Corporation that the proposed radio exposition to be held in Grand Central Palace September 10-17 be canceled. It is believed that this action will be to the interest of both the public and the entire radio industry.

"The directors are recommending to all of its exhibitors that they exhibit at the Radio World's fair to be held in New Madison Square garden September 13-18 under the auspices of the Radio Manufacturers' association."

New Music Feature For Eveready Hour

A new treatment of musical programs is being arranged by the program directors of the Eveready Hour for the regular Tuesday evening presentations through the summer from WEAF.

Two orchestras will alternate in broadcasting Tuesday evenings from WEAF and affiliated stations. One is the Eveready Chamber Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Max Jacobs, and is a part of the year 'round Eveready Hour staff. The other is the Everready Novelty orchestra, which consists of a specially selected leader and group of musicians.

NEW METHOD IS FOUND FOR RECEIVING STATIC

Dr. L. W. Austin, Bureau of Standards, Explains Use of System.

SUCCESS IN CANAL ZONE

The only practical method thus far discovered of reducing atmospheric disturbances or static in radiotelegraphy or telephony in any marked degree, at a given frequency, is that of unidirectional reception; that is, by using some form of antenna or antenna system which receives more strongly from one direction than from another, says Dr. L. W. Austin, bureau of standards. Well-known forms of such systems are the beverage or wave antenna used extensively by the Radio Corporation of America for transoceanic reception, and the older but more convenient, though somewhat less effective, combination of aerial and coil antenna (loop).

Unidirectional reception is useful whenever the static does not come from too nearly the same direction as the station being received. By such means, the ratio of signal can often be made from ten to twenty times better than on a simple antenna. In choosing the site of a receiving station it is of great importance, therefore, to discover the prevailing static direction and its changes during different seasons of the year.

In a paper presented by Dr. Austin before the American Institute of Radio Engineers, measurements made at Colon and Balboa, at the opposite ends of the Panama canal, on the changes in static direction from February to November, 1925, are described. The results indicate that during the dry season (January, February and March); while the sun is in the South, the static comes from the Southeast at both stations. During the rest of the year, the local static from the low mountain chain running along the isthmus seems to produce most of the radio disturbance. This causes prevailing southerly or southeasterly static at Colon, and northerly or northwesterly static at Balboa. For reception from the United States this should give Colón quite an advantage over Balboa as a receiving site during most of the year.

ORGAN RECITAL SERIES ON WBAL DURING JULY

Baltimore, Md., June 26—A series of organ recitals will be given over WBAL, Baltimore's superpower station, during the month of July, by Howard R. Thatcher, one of the best-known organists in the South. Mr. Thatcher will play two recitals a week, using the James Wilson Leakin Memorial organ, recently installed in the concert hall of the Peabody Conservatory of Music. These recitals will go on the air every Monday and Thursday evening, from 8 to 8:30 o'clock, beginning July 5.

In addition to his work as organist and choir director of two of the largest churches in the city, Mr. Thatcher's works include a concert overture, played by the Metropolitan Opera House and the Victor Herbert orchestras, "Legend," played by the Baltimore Symphony orchestra, a recently-completed symphonic fantasy.

WBAL is one of the first stations in the country to establish a concert bureau in connection with its broadcasting artists; the fact that through this proposed concert bureau WBAL artists will be able to secure personal concert engagements is expected to set a precedent in the world of radio broadcasting.

WELL-LIGHTED HOME PRODUCT OF PROPER WATTAGE AND TYPE

FROSTED LIGHTS URGED FOR SEWING AND READING

Amber Advised for Dining Room, Enamel for Kitchen and Bathroom.

By SUSAN ELLEN DODGE.

To the majority of housewives electric light bulbs are just bulbs—and that is all. When one is burnt out it is substituted with whatever kind is at hand irrespective of its wattage or type. Obviously the selection of bulbs is not given the consideration it deserves, and hence the majority of homes are poorly lighted despite the convenience and efficiency of electric light.

It might be well, however, before going any further, to define what is really a well-lighted home. It is a place where the decorative and utilitarian aspects of light have been considered and both have received equal attention. Needless to say, this result can not be had by haphazard use of any bulb that happens to be at hand, or that the dealer in your neighborhood has in stock. Floor and table lamps, chandeliers and side brackets will give you best lighting results only when they are equipped with bulbs of proper wattage and type.

Choosing Lamp Bulbs.

This is ascertained by experimentation with the various kinds of bulbs of different wattage. I have found that my portable lamps having three sockets become more flexible and efficient sources of light when equipped with 25-watt frosted bulbs. This gives me bright light for use when sewing or reading, lower intensity for other purposes, and often only one bulb in each lamp proves sufficient. Two-socket lamps will give better light when the bulbs used are of higher wattage, but they are not so flexible. For portable lamps I take the round ball-type bulb in preference to the pear-shape type.

The ceiling lights are a question of conforming to the style of the chandelier. The shower or cluster type looks best when equipped with round bulbs and if there are five or more, either 15 or 25 watt bulbs may be used, depending upon the volume of light that is needed. If the chandelier is bowl type, then larger wattage bulbs must be used. Where there is only one socket, an enamel or daylight bulb of 75 or 100 watts will be most effective. Single side brackets are usually equipped with 25 watt round frosted bulbs. If the bracket is double, 15 watt bulbs are sufficient.

In the Dining Room.

The dining room light is not at its best when equipped to give white light. It is a little too harsh for the eyes as well as the complexion, hence mine is equipped with 25 watt amber colored bulbs which have proved very satisfactory.

Kitchen and bathroom units are most efficient when equipped with enamel or daylight bulbs, the wattage depending upon the type of lighting unit used. In our house there are alway on hand several of each kind of bulb in use. There is no makeshift lighting anywhere. The bulbs are quite reasonably priced and come in cartons of two, four or six. The top shelf of the kitchen cabinet or pantry is an ideal place for them, or a like place in the laundry.

RADIO IS SUGGESTED AS WAY TO SPREAD UTILITY ADVERTISING

Possibilities Are Widely Discussed, but Definite or Final Action Is Delayed.

IS HELD APPROPRIATE IN ELECTRIC INDUSTRY

Programs Should Be Made of Interest to Every Home, It Is Argued.

By MARTIN P. RICE,
Manager Advertising, Publicity and Broadcasting, General Electric Co.

The early days of public utility companies were necessarily occupied largely with problems of the production and distribution of gas and electricity, or the operation of cars. Central station men went diligently about their business—financing, improved generation of power and light, better methods of distribution and greater reliability and increased safety.

The number of customers increased rapidly, and personal acquaintance which results in mutual understanding became more and more difficult. The public did not enjoy the utility companies' full confidence, and an unfriendly feeling began to develop. Even an announcement of plans designed to render improved service was liable to be received with suspicion as to the real motive. These were the days when people spoke of "soulless corporations."

New Way to Reach Public.

Science and inventive genius have recently contributed two new agencies for reaching the public so that, in addition to the printing press, we now have two other important factors in influencing public opinion. They are the motion picture film and radio broadcasting.

Broadcasting is an example of one of the few ideas that did not have to be sold to the public. From the time that C. Q. D. messages were flashed from the S. S. Republic and resulted in the dramatic rescue of a shipload of passengers, every one has been interested in radio.

The use of broadcasting in advertising has been widely discussed, but the art is really too new to warrant definite or final conclusions. Broadcasting probably will not be employed in direct selling until some plan is provided by which such advertising can be definitely segregated from all other programs.

Broadcasting of Value.

In the field of public utility advertising, broadcasting seems to be particularly valuable. Aside from the fact that it is a development of the electrical industry which underlies the operation of most of our public utilities today, and, therefore, seems to be an appropriate agent to employ. It has the peculiar advantage of expressing personality, and it reaches the customers of a public utility in their homes when they are at leisure and their minds are receptive.

The cost of a broadcasting station, not including land or buildings, is on the order of $100,000. Some stations represent a much larger investment, and many considerably less. The annual cost of maintenance and operation is an expense approximately equal to the cost of the station. Under present crowded conditions, with practically no new wave length available, the construction of new stations is not warranted, especially where technical developmental work in broadcasting is not to be undertaken.

Must Interest Every Home.

Two valuable characteristics of radio broadcasting have been stated in this paper, namely, it reaches people in their homes, and it has personality. These characteristics must never be overlooked. Nothing should ever be included in a broadcast program which is not appropriate for every home, and the personality which is inseparable from broadcasting should be the real personality of the public utility, not that of a professional performer or announcer.

By this, I mean not only that the talks should be given by the president, vice president or some one actually responsible for the policy of the company in the matter of public relations, but also that the type of program should be selected with the same realization of responsibility. A song, or even an instrumental section, in a broadcast program reflects personality fully as much as the clothing and manners of a personal representative.

It is hoped that no one infers that broadcasting is presented as a substitute for older forms of advertising and publicity. There seems to be no warrant for such assumption. Broadcasting is a new agency which has been received into millions of American homes, and it has inherent personality. The public has not been educated to believe that it should pay the cost of broadcast programs any more than it expects to pay the cost of a newspaper or popular magazine. The advertiser pays.

Electricity in April Sets New Rate Figure

The average daily production of electricity by the use of water power in April again exceeded all previous rates, a survey reports, amounting to 77,200,000 kilowatt hours a day. This rate is about 6 per cent larger than the previous maximum rate in March of this year.

The total output of electricity by public utility plants in April was 5,784,532,000 kilowatt hours. Of this output, 2,315,369,000 kilowatt hours was produced by water power and 3,469,163,000 kilowatt hours by fuels. Consumption of fuels by electric public utility power plants in the production of electricity in April, was: Coal, 3,142,016 short tons; fuel oil, 659,700 barrels, and natural gas, 3,589,545,000 cubic feet.

Electric League Briefs

By N. H. BARNES, Assistant Secretary

Day after tomorrow—on Tuesday, June 29—the Electric league holds its third annual outing at Morgantown, Md., on the Potomac, when about 300 electrical people, with their families and friends, will frolic as they do only on this one day each year. Nearly 100 automobiles will form an impressive caravan, leaving Eleventh street and Pennsylvania avenue southeast at 9 o'clock in the morning. The outing committee of the league will supply constant amusement, starting with luncheon after arrival at the resort, and including games of all kinds, music and dancing, swimming, and the usual free-for-all, catch-as-catch-can general good time. It has been said that the party will be enhanced if President L. T. Souder delivers an address some time during the day. He has developed into an orator who rivals Will Rogers and Ed Wynn. Jere Mackessy, A. M. Hyler, and R. P. Gibson are the committee in charge. Ask them for further details.

Speaking of President Souder's ability at extemporaneous oratorical wit, we point with pride to the classic delivered at the last meeting, when George Colbeck said that a certain subject hadn't been discussed and the chair came back with, "Maybe not, but you sure have done one lot of talking about it."

Joseph S. Repetti, one of the original members of the Electric league and still very interested in all of its affairs, has not attended the last couple meetings. A special request, to this member and others who are in danger of forming the bad habit of losing the value of attendance at these meetings, is being sent over the wire carrying the message of the importance of these meetings. L. L. Hayes, of the attendance committee, is looking after this, and one other member of this committee, H. W. Keefe, is also on the job to bring out big crowds.

A regular meeting of the league was held at the City club on June 17. One of the best attendances of any of the meetings was present at this one, and there was much general discussion and keen interest displayed.

E. C. Graham, president of the National Electrical Supply Co., was present at this meeting. Mr. Graham is engaged in work for so many civic organizations that it is not always possible for him to attend electric league meetings, but it is always pleasant to have him.

Although Mr. Graham can not get to all of the meetings, his vice president, T. Lincoln Townsend, is always with us in every constructive undertaking the league considers.

At the last meeting a new group was authorized for the league, which now consists of separate group organizations, dividing the membership into classes determined by the nature of their business. The new group is to be known as the "At Large Group" and will include as its charter or original members Calder C. Downie, of Baltimore; G. H. Triplett, of Philadelphia, and A. C. Eastburn, Graybar Electric Co., and W. Lester Baker, the last two being of Washington. All of these members are manufacturers' agents.

Members attending the June 17 meeting of the league who are new in the organization or who hadn't been seen by their electrical associates for some time were asked to stand by the President and they all received a warm welcome. Among them were Charlie Busey and Dick Murphy, contractors; Leo Cleary, of the Standard Engineering Co., and F. McKenna, of the Shull Co.

Samuel Adams Chase, of the Westinghouse Electric Co., has been invited to address the Electric League of Washington on September 9 on the subject "Selling the Electrical Idea." The invitation has been extended through the Washington Westinghouse office with the cooperation of one of the league's best workers, A. M. Hyler.

The union contractors group of the Electric League of Washington is holding weekly luncheon meetings now. Every Wednesday these meetings are held at the City club at noon.

The business promotion committee of the league, of which Howard P. Foley is chairman, has been instructed to send a letter to all active members of the league telling of the details of the plan which is to be started this fall for selling the electrical idea to the people so that the best can be obtained from their electrical equipment and apparatus.

The National Electrical Supply Co. is to hold an outing at Morgantown-on-the-Potomac on August 14. T. L. Townsend, vice president and sales manager, is handling some of the details in connection with this outing and is getting a good many ideas from the league.

The president of the Electric League of Washington receives each week a copy of the weekly letter issued by the New York Electrical Board of Trade and written by that organization's board chairman, Charles L. Eidlitz, who has become nationally known in business. A long article recently appeared in one of the big national monthlies telling of the career of Mr. Eidlitz.

William Allen White Lauds Electric Uses

William Allen White, of Kansas, after good naturedly bantering them on their work, recently told a convention of several thousand executives in the electrical industry that their job was much more than the mere delivery of electricity to operate motors, percolators, hair curlers and lamps. Mr. White said:

"Every time you put a wire into a bungalow you anchor five people to stable government, to American ideals. Every time you establish a labor-saving device in a home you save that home to democratic institutions. You run on the wire which brings them light and power something strong, something more than the juice you sell. No matter what your political principles are, no matter what your ethical standards are, you, too, who sell the juice, you who think you are mere peddlers of service, are mistaken. You are something more, something mysteriously controlled, some part of the great ethical forces which are binding modern civilization into a great spiritual fraternity. You are selling, no matter what your low notions of salesmanship are, you are selling altruism, brotherhood, the coming of a new and finer era in this old world."

Austrian Lines Electrified.

The Austrian State railways has just completed converting its 85-mile Arlberg line from Bludenz to Innsbruck in the Tyrol Alps and its Salzkammergut division, 67 miles long. These lines run through tunnels and around many windswept mountain shoulders. The overhead trolley wire is of bronze over most of the distance to withstand the high winds and heavy sleet storms.

REFRIGERATOR SALES SHOW BIG INCREASE

Copeland Products Reports Gain of 400 Per Cent Over May of 1925.

Copeland Products, Inc., manufacturers of Copeland electrical refrigeration, announced that sales in May exceeded those of May of last year by more than 400 per cent and showed a 500 per cent increase over the average monthly sales for 1925.

For the first five months of 1926, sales exceeded the combined sales made in 1924 and 1925. A comparison of sales for this period with the comparative period last year shows an increase of 560 per cent. The production department is operating at maximum capacity, despite the fact that manufacturing facilities have been increased by 300 per cent since the first of the year.

In commenting upon the outlook for electrical refrigeration, W. D. McElhinny, vice president in charge of sales, stated: "The remarkable growth of electrical refrigeration during the last year is proof conclusive of the service which this industry is giving to the users of these refrigerators. For a long time the layman has considered the electrical refrigerator as a desirable luxury. However, there is at the present time an ever increasing group of those who realize the necessity of electrical refrigeration. Indications are that demand will be even greater during the latter part of the year than during the first five months."

Worker Aided by Electricity.

Tools driven by electricity share their benefits alike with laborer and employer. The electric drill, for instance, has lifted the digger out of the class of ordinary labor, raised his wages, and made him skilled. The work he does is more valuable because he can do so much more of it. He can literally move mountains.

Time There Was—

When city passenger transportation was by means of horse-drawn vehicles;

When the flickering light of candles sought in vain to dispel the dark;

When Mondays were "blue" and the task of ironing sheer drudgery;

When little short of a cyclone could dissipate midsummer mugginess;

When the using of the broom meant the raising of dust,

And when the preparing of hot-weather meals was like a laborious sojourn in equatorial sultriness.

But it's very different now—

Since the harnessing of Electricity.

To Use Electricity MORE Is to Tax Time, Temper and Health Far LESS.

KALLIPOLIS GROTTO.

Monarch L. Whiting Estes, Past Grand Monarch E. S. Schmid, Past Monarchs E. W. Libbey and S. F. Shreve and Prophet A. Mitchell Phillips, returning from the annual supreme council convention, held at St. Louis, Mo., last week, state that the prophets of Alhambra grotto and the city of St. Louis staged the most wonderful convention in the history of the order. The sessions were harmonious and the business was transacted in record time. The convention was addressed by the grand master of Masons of Missouri, the mayor of St. Louis and other notables. The entertainment features were elaborate and enjoyable. The women in particular were showered with attention and entertained with luncheons, theater parties, automobile tours and boat rides. The prophets themselves were not neglected, many features of entertainment being provided for them. Judge Frederick P. Walther, of Cleveland, Ohio, was elevated to the office of grand monarch. Past Monarch E. W. Libbey of Kallipolis grotto, Washington, was advanced in the official line to the office of grand master of ceremonies; Eugene E. Smith, of Bendemeer grotto, Little Rock, Ark., won the coveted place at the bottom of the line. Cleveland, Ohio, was selected as the convention city in 1927. The attendance was estimated at from 50,000 to 60,000.

The next big event of Kallipolis grotto will be the annual family outing to Marshall Hall on August 3. Prophet Harry B. Plankinton has been designated by Monarch Estes as chairman of this event and he is already forming his various committees and promises an excursion of extraordinary character.

E. church, will deliver the sermon, and special music is being arranged for the occasion under the direction of R. E. Palmer and Charles E. Meyers. Rowan F. Erb, commander of Montgomery commandery, is president of the club and in charge of the general arrangements. The Rev. P. Rowland Wagner, pastor of the Rockville Baptist church, will preside.

The recent trip of the Trestleboard club to Fredericksburg, Va., was attended by 141 members of the club, the occasion being the returning to Fredericksburg lodge of the old record book of the lodge which had been rebound by bookbinders, members of the fraternity, employed in the government printing office. The visitors were entertained by the members of the Virginia lodge

The "silent card party" being conducted by the chapter for the benefit of the children's dormitory of the Masonic and Eastern Star home is continuing with undiminished interest. This party is attracting attention of friends of the chapter throughout the District and also elsewhere. An appealing feature lies in the arrangements whereby all funds realized will be applied directly to the benefit of the little ones at the home. The committee in charge is composed of Past Patron J. Harry Phillips, chairman; Mrs. Charles H. Cecil, vice chairman; Past Matrons Mabel K. Botsch and Etta Wilson Davis, Mrs. Elsie Babcock, Past Patron Frank Birgfeld and F. Gardner Johnson. The protection degree was conferred by the Boosters club ritualists, and Company B of the uniform rank supported the team. This was the first official service of Capt. Helgesen's men. The entire outfit will officiate at Bittenger, Md., July 24.

The Boosters club heard reports Friday evening on closing of the blanket campaign and the coming excursion to Marshall Hall. Chairman McConnell, of the committee, predicted that the Woodmen's river outing this year would be the most successful held. The degree team reported several invitations to give the protection degree to new classes.

Old Glory camp will hold a picnic on the canal above the District line in July. All local members are invited to the next session of the camp to hear the committee's report on preparations. Several visiting Woodmen will speak.

The uniform rank encampment will be held from August 2 to 7, at York, Pa. Regiments from Pennsylvania and New York and units from Washington, Maryland and Connecticut will attend.

AUTOMOTIVE NEWS AND GOSSIP

RESPECT THE RIGHTS OF THE PEDESTRIAN

OVERLAND WHIPPET APPEARS; DESIGNED ON FOREIGN MODELS

Car Is Low, Light and Is Said to Be Flexible to New Degree.

HAS FOUR CYLINDERS: ROOMINESS STRESSED

Declared to Have Greater Climbing Power; Brakes on Four Wheels.

The initial production of what may be the forerunner of a complete change in our great mass production of light automobiles made its appearance in this city this week. It is the Overland Whippet, on which the engineers of Willys-Overland, Inc., have been working, both here and in Europe, for the past two years.

This new car is totally different from anything we have ever seen before in this country. It looks different, it acts different and it serves a different but increasing demand. Mechanically, it is an adaptation of the best that Europe has to offer in the way of powerful, economical engines, with a wide speed range, more power for climbing, and with a flexibility, silence and smoothness of running which is new to our light car production.

It is a quality product in every detail, from the trim, smart, extremely low-hung body, with its brilliant finish and superb upholstery, to the last detail of its mechanical construction.

Thirty Miles Per Gallon.

It will accelerate from 5 to 25 miles an hour in 10 seconds, or in just half a second more time than some of our largest and most flexible "sixes," and it will cover 28 to 30 miles on a gallon of fuel.

It will stop in a little over twice its own length from an average driving speed, for it is equipped with four wheel brakes, having a drum diameter of 11 inches, which is larger than those on many of our large cars.

The motor develops 23 per cent more power per cubic inch of piston displacement than any other light four-cylinder motor built in America; this is one of the results of utilizing the European type of high-speed motor design. It has a 100-inch wheel base, and weighs just a little over 2,000 pounds. The power plant turns over 2,800 revolutions a minute, and gives a developed power of 30.5-horsepower from an S. A. E. rating of 15.6-horsepower. The total piston displacement is 134.2 cubic inches, somewhat larger than that of the average European car, but less than any other American-built, four-cylinder car.

Room Declared Ample.

The roof of this new-type car is only 5 feet 8 inches from the ground, yet the room inside the body is ample. Its first appearance is striking in the extreme. A man of average height can stand alongside it at the curb and rest his arms on the top and look over it. But a 6-footer can sit in it with all the room he wants. In this respect it is thoroughly American.

Inside, the body is 45 inches from floor to roof and there are 36 inches between the top of the seats and the roof. The seats are approximately 12 inches from the floor to the top of the cushions. There are 35 inches of space from the front of the front-seat cushion to the clutch and brake pedals. In the rear-seating compartment there are 36⅝ inches, affording greater room for the occupants of the rear seat than is found in any other light car built.

To give room for stretching out in the front seat, the metal dash is curved forward several inches, and there is as much leg room in this compartment as there is in the rear.

The front seat is 40½ inches wide and the rear seat is 45½ inches wide, the conventional widths for these two seats.

The doors are wide and hung on four hinges, so that it is extremely easy to get in or out.

Radiator High and Narrow.

Perhaps one of the greatest surprises this car has to offer, outside of its performance ability, is the roominess in the body.

The radiator is conspicuously high and narrow and is housed in a deep, nickeled shell. The body lines sweep gracefully back without any break at the cowl, giving an appearance which is intriguing in the extreme.

The bullet headlamps have nickeled shells and are strongly supported with a tie rod at the front.

Tire sizes present something entirely new, being 27 inches in diameter, with a 4.40-inch cross section, and are of the balloon type. These are the smallest tires ever used as stock equipment. It is the claim of the engineers that this size of tire on the Whippet will result in exceptionally long tire service, and forecasts of as high as 20,000 miles to the set have been made.

The interior appointments of this car are tasty in every way. The instrument board is of metal with a circassian walnut finish, on a gracefully designed panel. The board carries the starting and lighting switch, oil gauge, ammeter, speedometer and dash lamp. Upholstery is of a fine ribbed velour of rich coloring and fine fabric. The levers for lifting or dropping the windows are nickeled.

The windows are unusually wide, and the windshield is of the one-piece type which has come into fashion among the finer types of automobiles.

Bore Is Smaller.

The bore is 3⅛ inches and the stroke is 4⅜ inches, giving the piston a displacement of 134.2 inches. This is somewhat larger than the average for the European type motors, but is smaller than any other American built motor of stock production. The increase over the English and French dimensions was made to give the car certain performance features in high gear which are not required by European users.

The pistons are of cast iron, but are extremely light in weight, as are the connecting rods. The crankshaft is short and heavy, weighing 27 pounds. It is balanced statically and dynamatically and eliminates whipping and vibration.

The oiling system comes in for especial attention. It is the modern full-pressure system. A drilled crank shaft is offered for the first time in light-car construction in this motor. The whole design of the lubricating system follows the practice set for our larger cars, oil being forced through the crankshaft to the bearings and thrown off the main bearings to lubricate the cylinder walls and valve mechanism.

Cooling is by pump circulatory system with over 8,000 square inches of cooling area.

Motor, clutch and transmission are in one unit, the clutch being of the single plate type, transmission being the modern three forward speed, selective sliding construction with an extra long change gear lever to facilitate the operation of the gear shift.

An inclosed propeller shaft is used and the rear axle is of the semifloating type with the axle members removable. It is carried in a banjo type rear axle housing.

Auto-Lite system, two unit construction starting and lighting is employed and an Auto-Lite ignition system is used. This is in line with the use of this type of equipment throughout the entire car.

Cattle Region Plains Now Like a Garden

San Antonio, June 26 (By A. P.).—The great cattle country of southwest Texas, usually an expanse of sunburned plains and hills in fact as well as in the minds of readers of Western fiction, this summer is a veritable garden.

Due to the abnormal rains the grass is thick and long, and there is more range than is needed for the hundreds of thousands of grazing cattle.

Cattlemen say that not in several years has there been so much vegetation in the country between San Antonio and El Paso. Last year was a year of severe drought. Cattle men anticipate better profits than have been their lot in several years.

PROPER AUTO OILING IS HELD IMPORTANT TO LONG LIFE OF CAR

"ONE-SHOT" SYSTEM CLEVELAND 6 FEATURE

Owner Is Required to Use Plunger Only About Once a Week.

Years ago when a person was in the market for a new car performance was the primary consideration, but today most every car will render satisfactory performance in the demonstration, consequently what the large majority of buyers want now is the assurance of efficient day in and day out service, coupled with long life.

Granting that a car is built right from an engineering standpoint, what factor is so vital in assuring a prospective buyer of satisfactory service and long car life as proper lubrication?

It will be admitted that much of the rapid wear of some motor car parts and why one hears so many cars squeaking and rattling as they roll down the avenue is due to improper lubrication.

Regular Lubrication Assured.

The human element detests regular lubrication of the motor car, consequently manufacturers have within recent years been perfecting lubrication systems which are not only easier for the owner to operate but insure better and more positive lubrication to various parts of the car which have a tendency to wear more rapidly than others.

In this evolution of motor car lubrication for the convenience of the owner and the satisfactory operation of the car, the Cleveland Six has played an important part. It was the first company to adopt and pioneer the one-shot automatic chassis lubrication system.

With the one-shot system it is unnecessary for the car owner to lubricate the car manually. All any driver has to do is to step on a conveniently located one-shot plunger about once a week and oil is forced from a centrally located reservoir to every vital bearing on the chassis.

Quantity of Oil Regulated.

Small meters throughout the chassis regulate the quantity of oil for the various locations, a drop or teaspoonful, according to requirements. This means efficient lubrication, not only because each part receives its allotted quantity of oil, but because the system is so easy to operate, the owner oils the car regularly, consequently wear is minimized.

The same careful attention has been paid to the lubrication of the Cleveland Six motor as was exercised with the chassis. Under pressure of 50 pounds to the square inch, oil is forced to all bearings in the power plant. In using this practice, lubrication of the motor like the chassis is positive, consequently wear is minimized and the life of both units is materially increased.

U. S. Dam Will Pay Old Debt to Indians

Florence, Ariz., June 26 (By A. P.).—A half-century-old debt owed the Pima Indians by the United States government will be paid with the construction of the Coolidge dam on the Gila river, about 50 miles east of here. Government engineers are ready to begin construction.

Eighty thousand acres of land will be irrigated by the dam which will be the first so-called "dome-type" to be built. Half of this acreage will be cultivated by the Pima Indians of the Gila river reservation, whose once prosperous fields were rendered unproductive by diversion of water from the Gila by settlers on the upper stretches of the stream.

PASSAGE OF ROAD BILL PLEASING TO MOTORISTS

A. A. A. Predicts Federal Aid System Can Complete Program in Five Years.

$75,000,000 ANNUALLY

From the standpoint of the 20,000,000 car owners of the country, the most important piece of legislation enacted by the present Congress was the Federal aid appropriation bill passed by the Senate on June 11 in the opinion of the American Automobile association.

As the measure assures Federal funds to match State funds through 1928 and 1929, President Henry predicted that the Federal aid highway system as originally projected will be completed inside five years. He said:

"The appropriations authorized by the bill recently enacted are $75,000,000 annually for the fiscal years 1928 and 1929 for roads on the Federal aid highway system and $7,500,000 annually for those years for roads in and to the national forests. The bill continues Federal participation on an undiminished scale up to June 30, 1929.

"Approximately two-thirds of the 200,349 miles of highway on the Federal aid system have been improved. According to the 1925 figures, the total cost to the Federal government to improve 1 mile of highway averaged $9,850, or for practical purposes, $10,000. This means that during the fiscal years 1927, 1928 and 1929 an additional 22,500 miles of improved roads should be added to the system.

"If the States continue to improve roads on the Federal aid system at their own expense, as they have done in the past, they will, during that period, add another 30,000 miles so that at the close of the fiscal year 1929 we should have about 50,000 more miles of improved roads. At the most, it should not take more than five years to improve all of the roads on the system.

"When the Federal aid system was designated in 1921, it was hoped that its improvement could be completed within ten years. At the present rate, it is apparent that this hope will be realized and that within five more years, if nothing happens to retard the progress, there will be a continuous interstate highway system connecting every city of 5,000 population or larger, and every section of it improved to the degree consistent with the density and character of the traffic."

SERVICE IMPORTANT TO EVERY MOTORIST MAKING LONG TRIPS

Wise Car Owner Gives Careful Consideration to Prospective Repairs.

NECESSITY ON THE ROAD GREATER THAN AT HOME

Studebaker Has 3,000 Authorized Stations and School to Train Men.

"What kind of service stations will we find on our trip?"

With the touring season now in full swing, this is a question that is on the tongues of many motorists contemplating long trips.

It is a wise car owner who gives it careful consideration before starting on his motor vacation. Getting the right kind of service on tour is just as important as at home; more so, even, because the car is being subjected to harder usage and the driver usually does not have recourse to returning the car to the station if the servicing is not done properly.

Authorized Station Best.

The service system that an automobile manufacturer builds and maintains is an important part of his business. Probably no automobile concern has gone to the lengths that Studebaker has to insure good service for its owners wherever they may go.

There are 3,000 authorized Studebaker service stations in the United States. The foremen and mechanics in these stations are kept advised of the latest improvements in the methods of adjusting and keeping in prime condition even the most insignificant parts of a car. A constantly up-to-date manual, a monthly magazine, the Service Bulletin, talks by field service managers and formation of service clubs that hold monthly meetings are a part of this nation-wide system.

One of the most interesting features is the service and technical school maintained by the corporation in South Bend for dealers' shop foremen, mechanics, and apprentices. Without tuition cost, a dealer can send any of his service men or applicants for service jobs to this school. During four months in the summer the corporation even houses the students free of charge for a 30-day session.

They are schooled in the servicing of every part of the car. They are not merely given lectures, but must put into practical shop work what they learn.

The result of this organized effort is this: It gives every dealer, in no matter how small or remote a town, the same opportunity to keep fully abreast of intelligent, up-to-date service practice.

INTEREST IN PATRONS HELD BUSINESS ASSET

Jordan Says Personal Contact Is Great Factor for Successful Enterprise.

Taking a personal interest in the people to whom you sell merchandise is one of the fundamental elements in the success of any business, according to Edward S. Jordan. In the old days the owner of a store knew all of his customers by name, greeted them at the door, frequently waited on them personally and helped them into their carriages.

That established a relationship which was a tremendous asset to the business and a relationship that is too often absent in these days of big business and mass production and selling.

"The customers in any line of business are the most valuable asset that you have," says Jordan, "and their patronage should be highly appreciated, because your growth and success depends entirely on their satisfaction." Jordan believes that something of the old-fashioned personal contact can still be maintained in modern business through correspondence. He sends a personal letter to every purchaser of a Jordan car and follows it a few months later with a second one.

Alaskan Fur Output Nearly $100,000,000

Seattle, June 26 (By A. P.).—Furs shipped from Alaska to the United States since its purchase in 1867 have been appraised at $98,800,000. The value of last year's output was $3,000,000. Ninety per cent of the world's fur seals are in a herd owned by the United States government in the Pribilof islands, off the coast of Alaska. The herd numbers approximately 700,000. Government sales of fur seal skins during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, totaled $528,828.

CHRYSLER PREDICTS BUSINESS WILL HOLD OWN TO END OF YEAR

HOLDS NO BASIS EXISTS FOR CHANGE IN TRADE

"American business should face the second six months of 1926 with genuine confidence. Times are good. Times will continue to be good. There is no ground for any pessimism."

"A great many business men study graphs on which are indicated current economic tendencies," said Mr. Chrysler. "These men have observed business cycles and there is the feeling among certain business men and bankers that the second six months of 1926 should see a certain economic reaction; in fact, a slight depression. That feeling is reflected in the attitude of the people generally who, after a period of prosperity, begin to look around as if anticipating a change in business conditions.

"There is no sound economic reason for any change in business conditions at the present time, business cycles to the contrary. Times should continue to be good."

"To be sure, everyone is not satisfied with the volume of business or its profitableness. But was there ever a time when every one was satisfied? Banks report that the volume of checks drawn in payment for goods and freight carried by the railroads has continued to exceed that of any previous year. Demand for labor is the most active since 1923.

"The automotive industry is enjoying good business. Earnings for the first quarter of 1926 exceed those of the first quarter, 1925, for most of the companies. The Chrysler Corporation, for example, had earnings of $3,501,000 during the first quarter of last year, and earnings of $4,112,000 during the first quarter of this year."

Mr. Chrysler reports that the Chrysler Corporation will produce in excess of 15,000 cars during June. Production on the new "60" model has reached 450 a day. Inventories are low and stocks in the hands of dealers are below normal at this time of the year.

LUBRICATOR ON AUTO KEEPS CHASSIS OILED

Packard Car Has Device That Filters Lubricant; Needs No Adjustment.

One of the most ingenious things that ever has been built into a motor car is the little device which conducts oil into each needed place on the chassis of the Packard car.

Small though it is, it not only acts as a nozzle for the chassis lubricator oil lines, but it does these other things: Meters the lubricant to the exact amount required for each individual point, filters the oil through a felt filter and strains it through a fine screen, seals itself automatically against the return of any oil into the line, and acts as stop against any possibility of dirt getting into the system.

Each one of these things also is done automatically and with absolute positiveness, and yet the device is so simple in operation that its life, without need of adjustment, will, it is believed, be far beyond that of any motor car.

Prince of Wales Plays Drums in Jazz Band

London, June 26 (By A. P.).—The Prince of Wales as a jazz band drummer has made his first appearance.

When the prince arrived at one of the fashionable clubs the band leader decided to give the royal visitor one of his favorite tunes, "I Wonder Where My Baby is Tonight," The prince began to dance almost immediately and kept at it through eight encores.

A little later the Prince took charge of the drum sticks, and gave the "trap" man a rest of several hours.

FEWER PLIES HELD BEST IN TIRE CONSTRUCTION

Inside Friction Is Declared Reduced; Safety Enters Into Question.

ONE IS IMPOSISBLE IDEAL

"How many plies should a tire have?" By some tire experts that question is regarded in the same light as that with which Abraham Lincoln looked at the question which called forth his famous reply. That question was, "How long should a man's legs be?" and his answer, that is taken as typical of the man and his shrewd humor, was "just long enough to reach the ground."

Similarly, according to Miller tire men, the number of plies in a tire should be sufficient to do the job required by the type of vehicle and the service that is demanded of it. This answer is not so obvious nor as generally accepted as would appear.

Contrary to general opinion, greater efficiency is in the direction of fewest plies compatible with safety. A one-ply tire, were it practical from an engineering point of view, would greatly reduce internal wear by elimination of interply friction, long known as the Achilles heel of tire life. The physical limits of cord strength alone make the one-ply tire an impossible ideal. Pressure requirements to carry a given load demand the additional plies. Tire engineers, however, who respond to no other dictates but that of tire efficiency, are firm in the stand that longest tire life is found where these additions are held to the safety limit of tire pressure.

Choice of a tire for a given service, according to these experts, will always be that tire which is composed of the fewest number of plies that will give the necessary factor of safety. The best interests of the tire buyer are served, not by arbitrary preference for four, six or eight ply tires, but by a careful adherence to the principle stated.

National Party Plans To Advance Meeting

Indianapolis, June 26 (By A. P.).—The national executive committee of the National party will meet here July 3 to consider a proposal to hold the annual convention in July instead of December and to change the rules to provide for a membership fee of $3 yearly and an additional payment of 50 cents a month.

Should the executive committee vote favorably on the convention change, new officers would be chosen next month, said John Zahnd, national president. Members of the committee will be permitted to vote by mail.

Read this one advertisement and you'll convince yourself that—

The New-Day
JEWETT SIX does give you more for your money

THIS advertisement is written for those solid citizens who are going to spend around a thousand dollars for a motor car—and who are going to insist that they get the greatest possible value for their money.

Vision

No motor car ever built, at any price, provides wider or freer vision than the New-Day Jewett. Slender pillars of sturdy steel, replacing wider yet weaker wood, and a wide sweep of glass—completely eliminate the deadly "blind spot."

Safety

No other car at Jewett's price is equipped with Paige Hydraulic 4-Wheel brakes. This is the most expensive braking system built—but the best and the safest. The slightest pressure brings the car to cushioned rest almost immediately. Brakes are always perfectly equalized.

Ease of Handling

Ball bearings are generously used throughout the steering mechanism of the New-Day Jewett. The steering wheel is large, and conveniently placed. The gear shift lever is within easy reach. You can steer the New-Day Jewett with your finger tips—and drive it all day without fatigue.

Engine

The highly perfected and wonderfully simplified engine develops ample power for your every need; more speed than you'll ever require. Oil forced under high pressure prevents bearing wear and insures smoothness and long life. Timing is accomplished with the best silent chain drive on the market.

Accessibility

Extreme accessibility is seen not only on the engine, but throughout the chassis. Compare with other cars and see how much more quickly and easily you can remove the cylinder head to clean carbon; see how readily you can get at tappets, timing, electrical units, differential gears, and steering gears for adjustment and inspection without removing from car.

Sturdiness

The chassis of this Jewett is solid and substantial enough to support a car twice its size. The frame is 5½ inches deep where most cars of this class are 4½ inches or 5. Springs are from 1 to 4 inches longer than other cars in Jewett's field. Clutch, transmission, axles and drive shafts are larger than commonly used—always oversize.

Roominess

There is more interior room in the New-Day Jewett Sedan than in many cars of much longer wheelbase. The leg room in front measures 40 inches; in the rear, 48 inches. The head room is the same as in the more expensive cars. The extra wide seats hold five adults comfortably.

Features and Accessories

The pedal pads are adjustable; the running boards are all steel; there is a cowl ventilator; dome light, door pockets. The car is upholstered in beautiful silky, long wearing materials—it is finished in lacquer; rubbed, waxed and polished. There are rotary window lifts; a coincidental theft-proof lock; the battery is unusually large, and there are many other features.

Try Them—
Before You Buy Them

Specification for specification—feature for feature—point for point—this New-Day car will quickly and definitely convince the most careful buyer of its greater value. We'll arrange a demonstration anywhere or at any time—entirely without obligation. Come in—or phone us—soon.

Its mileage limit has never been discovered

Today more than 300,000 Willys-Knight cars are in active service. Many of these date back to 1913. Many have traveled 300,000 miles and over. We know of no instance in which a Willys-Knight engine has ever worn out.

Willys-Knight Great Six Sedan $2295

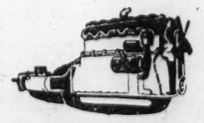

Lighting control within easy finger-reach, directly under steering-wheel, gives greatest degree of safety in night driving with least possible personal effort.

The Knight sleeve-valve engine—patented, protected, exclusive. An engine you'll never wear out. The only automobile engine in the world that actually improves with use . . .

In this modern, extremely efficient motor of the Willys-Knight Great Six Sedan you have one of the great features responsible for the sale of more than 25,000 of these superb Sixes within the last 12 months—a success-record never before equaled in the same length of time, we believe, by any other luxury car.

With no carbon troubles, no valves to grind, the Willys-Knight Great Six Sedan cuts the customary up-keep costs in two. Its engine requiring practically no adjustments, no repairs, you have a car that stays out of the repair shop and in your service, uninterruptedly, day in and day out. Owner after owner will tell you that, throughout his entire period of ownership, he has never been without the use of his car, because of engine troubles, for a day or a single hour.

From the first turn of its sleeve-valve engine, the most powerful, most efficient and quietest in operation of all cars of its type or class—the Willys-Knight Great Six Sedan—to a mileage point still undetermined—gains in power, gains in efficiency, gains in smoothness and silence with every mile. Thus you are forever protected against that weakness inherent in all poppet-valve cars—their tendency to become noisy, less powerful, less efficient after a few tens of thousands of miles.

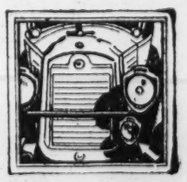

Here's the reason

The super-efficient Knight sleeve-valve engine is patented. But two makers of privately-owned passenger cars are entitled to build it. Willys-Knight is one of the two.

With its power-plant lending itself so marvelously to flexible, high-torque development, the Willys-Knight Great Six Sedan has upset all previous ideas of motor-car speed and power. Super-efficient, it has established standards for smoothness and quietness of operation and records for economy beyond anything ever before achieved. It is inevitable that the public should recognize and reward such superiority. Last month we built more Knight-engined cars than in any month in our history.

The new Willys Finance Plan means less money down, smaller monthly payments; and the lowest credit-cost in the industry.

$100,000 IS SPENT ANNUALLY TO KEEP PAIGE PLANT CLEAN

Company Believes Workers Do Better Jobs in Ship-Shape Shop.

FLOORS ARE SCRUBBED TWICE EVERY DAY

Filtered and Washed Air Is Used in Paint Room and Visitors Are Barred.

What price cleanliness?

The Paige-Detroit Motor Car Co. spends $100,000 a year just to keep its plant clean, yet considers it cheap at the price. Before it installed the special equipment and arranged the present elaborate clean up system, the cost was higher, but it was figured in production totals, injuries to workers, faulty workmanship and damaged parts. With the increased expenditures for cleanliness final costs were reduced, so that the purchaser of a Paige or a Jewett not only gets a better car, but saves on the purchase price.

The effects of constant cleaning are not only physical, but psychological. In a clean plant, the workers naturally do clean work and turn out clean jobs.

Few kitchens are kept cleaner or watched more carefully than the mammoth plant in which Paiges and Jewetts are constructed. Everything is ship shape.

Before the Paige plant operated on its present system, time had to be allowed for the workers to sweep up around their machines every so often, as steep chips or shavings or other waste accumulated. Now, guards have been installed on all the grinding and boring machines, so that the chips and shavings leave the machine through chutes, to be collected in receptacles. One worker, making regular rounds, empties the receptacles and this one man now does the work formerly requiring five men.

Twice a day the cement floors of the wide aisles through the factory are scrubbed with soap and water.

Paint Room Guarded.

In one department, cleanliness is carried out to the extent of barring every one but the operators of the machinery, even factory officials and executives being refused admittance. This is the great inclosed enameling department. Filtered and washed air circulates through the immense chamber containing the conveyors and ovens, through which thousands of metal parts pass hourly. Unfortunately, this interesting operation can not be exhibited, for if only one man walks through, lint from his clothes and dust from his sole leather mars the work.

In all other departments visitors are welcome.

Paris Chefs Anxious To Sign Their Menus

Paris, June 26 (By A. P.).—Head cooks at big hotels and restaurants have started a movement that would permit them to sign the menus of meals for which they are responsible.

No great opposition has been raised but the petitioners have been warned that with credit will come responsibility and the man whose indigestion gives him trouble after a meal will hold the signer of the menu personally to blame.

1926 Auto Sales Exceed Best Estimates of January

Industry Coming to Be Barometer of Prosperity. Merchandising Policy for Used Cars Causing Concern Among Dealers.

At the time of the national automobile show in New York last January, manufacturers were free in their predictions of excellent business for the first six months of this year. With but a few days remaining to go before the time limit expires, it is evident that the statements of even the most optimistic have been surpassed. To date, the year 1926, from an automobile manufacturer's standpoint, and despite lower prices, has been the greatest in the history of the industry. Stocks in dealers' hands today are normal.

In previous years there have been manufacturing records established, but almost without exception it has been at the expense of the dealer who was loaded up with new automobiles during the winter months, and as fast as he sold was restocked by the factory. With more years of experience behind them, the manufacturers have learned that overstocking the dealer may prove a manufacturing outlet for a time but ultimately it reacts upon them and consequently they are now refraining from this practice. It should not be assumed, however, that factory representatives do not keep a close check on dealer stocks and endeavor to see that at all times there is a comfortable stock of cars in the dealers' warerooms.

Formerly it was the steel industry that was considered the business barometer, but today more and more the motor car industry is being considered as the true basis of whether or not times are good. The demand for individual transportation is today stronger than ever and so long as highways continue to be improved this demand will continue.

What the second six months of the year will bring forth in the way of automobile sales remains to be seen. Those who have access to reports from all sections of the country are optimistic over the outlook though admitting naturally that it can hardly be hoped to be as good as the first half. Naturally this is to be expected for the summer is the big motoring season of the year and many buy with the thought of having the new car for their summer vacation.

As in previous years undoubtedly new models will be introduced before the year is over. Rumors have it that there are to be some innovations offered for public approval in the way of automobile design and construction. The most prevalent rumor is regarding the small European type of machine capable of exceptional gasoline mileage while combining the roominess and dependability of the larger models. In fact, one motor car manufacturer has already announced such a type of machine and it is expected that there will be one or two more who will have something to say along this line very shortly.

So far as the automobile dealer himself is concerned he is having his troubles trying to find a real merchandising policy for the used cars, which he must accept in part payment on new vehicles. Unfortunately there is no true basis of value for an allowance on any make or model of used car. Each and every car must be judged on its own individual merits. Some cars have a more ready used car market than others. Still more machines have been given better care by their original owners, and naturally command a better trade-in value. It is but natural that the customer should have an idea of what his car is worth. Quite naturally he looks at this valuation through his own eyes. He figures what the machine is worth to him, and the dealer must figure on what it will bring on the market. There is usually quite a difference in the two opinions. Both the salesman and the dealer are in a sense salesmen, because they both have something, one to sell the other, with this exception that the dealer's price on his new article is arbitrarily fixed by the factory, while the valuation of the used automobile is largely a matter of individual opinion.

Some dealers have now taken the stand that they will not consider the trade-in of a car under a certain figure. If the machine does not appraise for that fixed sum, they politely inform the customer of the fact, and then endeavor to deal with him on a no-trade basis or lose the business. Their argument is that the time is fast approaching when only used automobiles in good condition can be sold, and cars whose value is very low are not worth the expenditure of money to put them in shape. Besides it costs as much to house them, advertise them and sell them as it does a car of higher price, and one which the buyer will really get some service and satisfaction from. It is perhaps unfortunate for the individual who has this type of vehicle to trade, but when he steps out to dispose of it himself, he will, before he finds a buyer, perhaps realize why the dealer hesitated about handling the machine.

Arid Mexican Lands Produce for Italians

Nogales, Ariz., June 26 (By A. P.).—Transforming 5,000 acres of arid, unproductive land in the heart of the Sonora river delta, state of Sonora, Mexico, into a farmers' paradise has been the feat of a small colony of Italians, all in a space of seven years.

The settlers have built a thriving little community and have constructed 20 miles of substantial canals, checks and drains. The Italians have raised two crops a year on heretofore waste lands, including those of beans and corn (in December and January) and wheat in May. Now they are at work on a project to plant grape vineyards.

NEW DODGE OPEN CAR NOW BEING MARKETED

Latest Type Automobile Is Said to Have Many Improvements.

Distribution of the new sport touring car to its dealers in the United States is rapidly being completed by Dodge Brothers, Inc. The appearance of this product of a conservative manufacturer has attracted favorable attention everywhere.

The body and hood are finished in brilliant pheasant green lacquer set off by a single striping of partridge cream. A striking contrast is afforded by the glossy black of the fenders and shields, and the polished nickel of the radiator shell and lamp rims.

The deep upholstery is of gray Spanish hand buffed genuine leather. The natural wood spokes of the wheels, the nickel trimmed natural wood bows and nickeled stanchions of the low one-piece windshield with the tan-colored top give the car an appearance worthy of open cars much higher in price.

The cowl ventilator is easily controlled and is rain and wind tight when closed. The nickel trimmed head and cowl lamps are of an unusually attractive design.

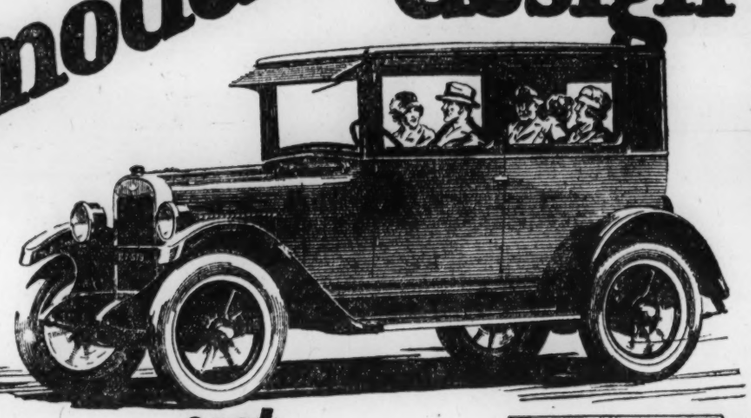

Wheels are of natural wood with black dagger stripes on the face of the spokes. Steel disc wheels are optional at no extra cost.

The special equipment is complete throughout and conforms to Dodge Brothers' well-known standards. Among the important items are: Nickeled radiator shell and emblem, one-piece windshield with automatic cleaner, robe rail, front and rear bumpers, bullet-shaped head lamps and cowl lamps, rear view mirror and scuff plates.

Who Is Best Able To Give Good Value In Automobiles

In general, there has been too much "horse-trading" and too little quality merchandising in connection with used automobiles.

In the hundreds of thousands of cars that are turned in each year on the purchase of new cars there remains a vast amount of unused mileage.

Thousands of people want just such cars—provided they can buy them on a sound, honest basis.

But they do want to be safeguarded in their purchase of used cars and the only final safeguard is the dealer. No automobile dealer can escape the penalty or the reward of his methods.

If he is a good dealer, permanently established, giving sound values at fair prices his business will prosper.

The great reputation of Cadillac—its position as the Standard of the World—is reflected in a dealer body of high standing and of fair, sound methods.

The integrity and standing of Cadillac dealers is woven into the warp and woof of Cadillac's prestige.

The Cadillac dealer looks upon every sale of a used car as the first step in the purchase of a Cadillac by that customer.

As a result he bends every effort to gain and hold the good-will of his used car customers.

In this way he safeguards his future business, and thus safeguards every purchase of a used car.

Furthermore, because of the tremendous sales success of the new 90-degree, eight-cylinder Cadillac, the Cadillac dealer has the very choicest used cars on the market.

How the Love Pirate Trapped His Silly Victims

Lying Tales of the Bogus War Aviator That Deceived Scores of Admiring Women Into Giving the Rascal Their Money, Jewels and Kisses

By C. DE VIDAL HUNT.

PARIS.

ROBERT LUCIEN GOURDIN, ruthless love pirate, has at last been arrested by the Paris police for abducting wealthy young girls and married women who believed he was one of the great aviator heroes of the war. Robert is 24 and a plumber by trade.

When the police inspectors arrested him he wore a brand new aviator's uniform. Upon his breast were the red rosette of the Legion of Honor with several foreign decorations and the French croix de guerre with twenty palms.

He surrendered with a smile and admitted that he had victimized at least 50 women in the past two years. His favorite pseudonyms were those of famous flying "aces" such as Pelletier Doisy, Arrachart and Marinowitch, though the latter has been dead three years.

Among the deeds of prowess that won him many hearts was the tale of his air battle with the German flier who had killed the celebrated Guynemer. He avenged Guynemer by sending his German antagonist to certain death from a height of 12,000 feet. Not satisfied with that he had destroyed 87 enemy planes in open battle, 36 balloons and one Zeppelin.

And in spite of Gourdin's conspicuous lack of good looks, there wasn't a girl who did not believe him, or a woman who wasn't happy to leave house and home for such a hero!

The story of this love pirate's adventures, as told by himself in his cell at the conciergerie, reads like one of those French novels that are not intended for girls' schools and therefore sell by the tens of thousands.

He was a clever lover, knowing exactly what to do in each case and how best to overcome a woman's scruples. The delicate procedure of getting young girls to steal their parents' money or love-hungry middle-aged women to run off with their husbands' bank account was mere child's play for Gourdin.

He lived at the finest hotels in Paris and played around the fashionable resorts of Deauville and Vittel, always with plenty of money to throw away on roulette or to bet on horses. Only a few of his victims will tell the police about their experiences. But it is known that wherever he went, he left a trail of broken hearts behind him.

The reason he was able to dupe so many women so completely, according to his own confession, was that he never allowed his own heart to be caught. He could tell the most daring things in such a way that women were thrilled rather than offended. And he worked fast. Gourdin never waited longer than 24 hours before a new citadel of womanly virtue surrendered to his love making. Nor did he ever linger longer than it took to acquire all the money his victims possessed.

His longest honeymoon, as he called it, lasted twenty-five days. And that was in the case of one of the most prominent actresses of Bordeaux who was finally rescued by her husband just as Gourdin had made away with 36,000 francs in cash and 65,000 francs in diamonds belonging to his victim.

It was this same husband who trailed Gourdin through ten subsequent adventures with women and then told M. L. de Donville, secretary of the Direction de la Police Judiciare, what had happened. Before ordering the adventurer's arrest, Secretary de Donville viewed a dozen photographs which the irate husband had collected along the trail of broken hearts.

Eight women were at police headquarters in the Prefecture when Gourdin was ushered into the room. It was a good thing for the love pirate that a high steel trellis separated him from the women in the room. They probably would have torn him to pieces, although

Gourdin cynically urged the detectives to let the women come to him.

"They won't bite," he sneered, "and there isn't a single one in the lot who would not go through the same experience with me again, even knowing that I am a crook. You don't know women, my dear boy."

But the women, some of whom were strikingly beautiful and apparently of the best class of society, looked at him vindictively as he challenged them to do their worst.

"The nasty love swindling pig!" cried one. "He swore he had never kissed a woman before in his life. His caresses cost me about 1,000 francs apiece."

"With the way I had with women," he said, "it would have been ridiculous to remain a plumber and live on 800 francs a month. Ease and luxury looked too beautiful to me and women were too easy. So I started out by having a fine aviator's uniform made for me by a good tailor. It cost half of my savings. Some more money went to buying decorations. I had no idea of flying, but thought the women would be more interested in aviation than in any other branch of the service.

"I was only 22 when I went to Paris from Rouen, but I looked like a man of 30. I took a room in one of the big hotels in the Champs Elysees and could not believe my own senses when I saw how they fell for me. It was marvelous. It seemed as though I was the only man in the world.

"Two rich American women immediately took me under their wings. I danced with them and showed them the dives that everybody in Paris knows, but which seemed specially interesting to them because of the thrilling tales of apaches and murders I unfolded.

"The things I told them about my flying exploits during the war were so exaggerated that I never expected them to believe me, but no matter how I lied, they believed every word I said. They swallowed the stuff avidly and called for more.

"One of them spoke French quite fluently. She was dance crazy.

"'I love to dance with you,' she said, 'because you don't perspire or step on my toes!'

"She expected her husband in Paris later in the month, but when he arrived I was gone. I went to Nice where I met a girl of good family. She fell madly in love with me after hearing of my aviation record.

"All she had in cash was 8,000 francs, but I still had 15,000 or more from what the American lady had given me and could afford a cheap job. Amelie was just 20. Two days after I first met her on the Promenade des Anglais, she told me she would go anywhere with me.

"'I love you,' I replied, 'and therefore must not let you come with me. Besides I have not the means to support you as you should be supported. No, no, Amelie, it is best that we part.'

"That same night she came to my room and put 8,000 francs into my hand. Am I to be blamed for taking it? I ask you. If women insist on giving me money and running away with me, am I to stop them?

"I never stole a sou. If any woman believed that I loved her, that was her affair. Amelie, like many others, said that a week with me would be heaven and she would give all she had to be in my arms. The decorations on my chest worked wonders.

"I went to Monte Carlo with Amelie and spent her money in five days. On the morning of the sixth day I was on my way to Bordeaux with a beautiful woman of 35 and her husband. The man was 28 years older than his wife, but thought he looked like a young prize-fighter. One of the first things he did was to make me feel his biceps. They were hard as steel, but that did not seem to impress his wife very much. She nearly fainted when I let her feel mine.

"Anyhow, when we got to Bordeaux I stayed at a good hotel and promptly called at the house of the beautiful lady. For three hours I told her some of my flying stories and when I got to my fight with the German ace who had downed Guynemer she fell on my lap and threw her arms around me.

"They were fat arms, but there were

Another of the photographs found in Gourdin's home—inscribed "A mon petit Robert" (To my little Robert) and with the name "Blanche" scratched out.

My honeymoon with her would not have lasted much longer anyway because the man with the biceps bobbed up one afternoon in the hotel where we were staying and behaved rather badly. He promised to kill me if only I would unlock the door of the room and let him in. His manner was so threatening that I thought best to leave by the window and take the first train back to Paris diamond bracelets on them and a diamond-studded Swiss watch, so I didn't mind. In fact, I liked it. I used to have a pal who was Swiss and the watch reminded me of him.

"Well, my love cost the lady a little over 100,000 francs in cash and diamonds. We went away and traveled from one place to another for 25 days. When the cash was gone she began selling her diamond bracelets. Finally the Swiss watch went too, and there was nothing for me to do except follow suit.

"My honeymoon with her would not have lasted much longer anyway because the man with the biceps bobbed up one afternoon in the hotel where we were stopping and behaved rather badly. He threatened to kill me if only I would open the door of the room and let him in. His manner was so threatening that I thought best to leave by the window and take the first train back to my beloved Paris.

"Of course I had saved some of that 100,000 francs in cash and jewelry. And Paris with the tourists flocking in from

England and America was the proper field for my aviation stories.

"In three months I yielded to five charming women who insisted that I take their cash together with their hearts. I had four apartments in as many sections of Paris and none of my sweethearts ever knew anything of the others. Two of them were mother and daughter. The girl was engaged to marry a wealthy merchant and the mother's husband was traveling in Sweden.

"I became so skillful in picking my victims that I seldom engaged in a love affair that did not enable me to live like a millionaire for months. And how those foolish women did adore their heroic aviator! Actually the hardest part of my task was to get away after I had squeezed the last sou out of them and stripped them bare of jewelry.

"When a married woman from Marseilles found her purse empty and the last of her jewels gone she actually planned to commit burglary to get the money needed to keep me with her a little while longer. I refused to let her carry out this plan. The crime would have brought only a few hundred francs—not enough to interest me at that stage of the game.

"One of the last of my love adventures had for its heroine the young widow of a wealthy wine merchant. Although I did fairly well with her she did not prove as profitable as I had expected because her large fortune was held in trust by a very tight-fisted old banker.

"Just when I thought I had exhausted her financial possibilities and was preparing to leave her, she managed to induce the banker to advance another 50,000 francs. This was enough to let me consent to her accompanying me to Deauville where she had been wanting to go.

"I am afraid I made her too happy, for the dear thing fell ill two days after our arrival at the famous seashore resort and nearly died. It was a terrible ordeal. There was that 50,000 francs and nobody to spend it.

"Luckily she pointed to her purse while in a half-conscious condition and I thought she meant that I should take all the money she had and make a trip to Paris. This I promptly did. I never saw her again.

"But on several occasions I saw the Bordeaux man with the biceps. I think it was he that got the police interested in my career. The poor fool! He should thank me for what I did."

TOO SMALL TO KICK.

On one of the Western railroads there was a small but very peppery division superintendent who believed in following things up in person.

He had received numerous complaints that freight trains were in the habit of stopping on a grade crossing in a certain small town, thereby blocking travel for long periods. He issued orders, but still the complaints came in.

So he went down to the crossing, and, sure enough, there stood, in defiance of his orders, a long freight train anchored squarely across it. A brakeman who didn't know him by sight sat complacently on the top of a car.

"Move that train on," sputtered the little "super." "Get it off the crossing so people can pass. Move on, I say!"

The brakeman surveyed the tempestuous little man from head to foot. "You go to the devil, you little tarantula," he drawled. "You're small enough to crawl under."—From Everybody's Magazine for July.

Seeing Paris by Taximeter

By Will Rogers

WELL, all I know is just what little I read in the papers or what I am obliged to see as I prowl the length and breadth of this great Universe. Well, I felt like I had a right to go to Europe because I believe that I am one of the few Americans that have seen America first. I haven't seen near all of it, and when I get back I am going to look over some more, and I know in my own heart that they haven't got a thing to show us over here that we haven't got at home and better. I had been over two or three times, years ago, but I thought, well, I will go and see if the Boys have scared up anything new. They hadn't anything new but the prices.

Well, after doing London, of course in the natural course of the Tourist route, why Paris comes next. Well, I only had a couple of days to spend there, as I was on my way down to Geneva to see what a Delegation of good Americans were doing in the way of Disarming at an annual argument they were holding there. The Boy, Bill Jr., age 14, and I blow into what is familiarly called the Gay City. We step off our airship, kinder pale and staggering, but we make it for a Taxicab. The Taxicabs in France have the lowest start in the way of money of any Taxicabs in the world. That is, they start in at one Franc. Now a Franc on the Tuesday afternoon at four-thirty when we were in this cab, was worth in money less than three cents, and there is Lord knows how many Sonteems in a franc.

Well, at each turn of the front wheel of the car the Meter jumps 10 Sonteems. Well, you have just settled back figuring here is something in Paris that I will get for nothing, for this thing is only one franc and that is just about half a nickle. You have gone about a couple of blocks and you are looking out watching what they call Peasants, pushing their wine Carts by. In our Country with the same load they would be called Plutocrats. You have just missed some dozen odd people by less than a quarter of an inch, driven on every side of the street there is, over the edges of the sidewalk, down a couple of what we would call Alleys, where you would say, well we are safe here; it's a one way street because there is no one that could pass us in here. All at once here comes a truck loaded with Fresh wine, labeled 1888. You say we can't pass that in this narrow place and you can't, but you do. Then when your blood pressure is approaching normal again, you just casually glance at the Taximeter. It registers in francs, 14, and in Sonteems, they are rolling by your eyes so fast you would have to stop to see what they did say. No human mind can read 'em as fast as they click by. You say why my goodness, I have only gone a couple of blocks. The number of Francs is caught up with the Sonteems. Now they are both chasing each other around the clock.

Traffic halts you, but it don't halt that thing. They have a way when they are standing still of having one wheel jacked up, and it don't interfere with the movement of the meter. You arrive at your destination some ten American Blocks away, and you hand them a hand full of Francs and then he comes back with "Fer Me, You No Pay Fer Me!"

* * * *

YOU give him another little bale or a handful. And if you stop to count up it has just cost you $3.80 to ride what you could have made the same trip in New York for about 45 cents, and no arguments about "Fer Me." Of course you always tip them, but this "Fer me" comes anyway. That's an extra tip for giving them the first tip.

"Sonteems are rolling by your eyes."

So your last chance of getting anything cheap in Paris has gone a-glimmering. They certainly started right with the meter when you got in, but from then on, brother, it showed you some speed.

You think on account of these Francs changing so fast in the rate of exchange that you should be getting the best of everything. Yes, that's another pet illusion. Say, they are up in the morning setting those Prices, and no jump that that Franc will make during the day will ever catch up with them. It could drop to one cent apiece in American money and they would still be ahead of you.

So I couldn't spend any particular great time worrying about the poor downtrodden Frenchman with the low cost of the Franc, especially if he comes in contact with the Americans in any way. It may be tough on them to deal with each other, but if you will just give one of them 10 minutes with an American you can save your pity for something that needs it. You know the American gets the idea that when he sees in the last paper that the Franc has reached a certain low price, he just can't hardly keep from jumping up and going out and start buying. He gets the idea that he is putting something over on his foreign Hosts. I don't know why he thinks the Frenchman can't read those same reports, and know what the Franc is doing as well as he does.

Here is another great gag they have over here. You know people in all these Countries speak different languages, but they are supposed to write figures in the same language. For instance, when you get your Bill in the Cafe, all you should have to do is to read the figures on it, but say, you can't read the figures on it. A Handwriting expert can't read the figures. You start to add up the bill, because every American always warns every other one, "Oh, do add up you bill! You really are supposed to. It's not considered cheap like it is in America when you do it. So always add up!" Well, here is what you will find. The 3s are all made to add up and look like 8s; 7s like 9s. So you take a figuring system where there is no such thing as three and seven and jump them up a few notches to 8s and 9s, and you have a pretty good percentage system working for you. The men running Monte Carlo are just apprentices in the percentage figuring game compared to these. So you can't add the thing up because you can't read the man's writing. You just as well add a Chinese Laundry slip.

YOU see, there is another thing over here that we are slow getting accustomed to. Over home if you go into a place and order Ham and Eggs and Coffee, why when the bill comes it would have those two objects on it. Ham and Eggs, so much, and Coffee so much. There would be two items, that's all. But in France or Italy there would be a long slip. So many sonteems or francs for waiter taking order, so much for rent, so much for bread, so much for butter, and if by any chance you had a glass of water with it, that would be harder to get and cost more than the ham and eggs. Now these Ham and Eggs would be split in the addition. They don't pair any two things in the billing over there. Bread and butter may eventually get together in the hands of an expert American. But they will never become so closely associated that they will not be prominent enough to be priced separately.

Then there is a Luxury tax. Then a Cover charge, that is even if you are eating on the sidewalk with no cover over you. Pepper and Salt are only served on demand. So really what started out to be only a light breakfast will add up to be a dinner. Try to find out what these twelve items are on the bill. They all speak English when selling you something, but if asked to explain a bill their English gets back to native again.

So from what I have been able to learn about these people in a kind of an offhand way, I'd say that they don't take bad care of themselves at all in any financial arrangements. Europe is supposed to be Artistic, but if I had to judge I should place their financial ahead of their Artistic ability. So in offering prayers for downtrodden races I would advise you not to overlook the Downtrodden Tourist.

Helen Maria Learns Something At Her First Session of Congress.

"WELL, Philbert," said the Senator's secrefary, "here we are at the end of the session, and the Senate didn't revise the rules after all."

"What rules, Miss Hazel?" asked the clerk of the committee, "golf or poker?"

"You can't change those rules," replied Hazel pityingly. "I'm talking about the rules of parliamentary procedure. They're in a terrible state and nothing has been done about 'em."

"That's so," admitted Philbert. "Maybe the Senate will stay in session until this oversight has been fixed up."

"That shows you don't know the Senate."

"Maybe the Vice President was too busy interviewing the newspaper correspondents to fix up those rules," said Philbert.

"That wouldn't keep him busy," explained Hazel. "He's got a phonograph, a radio, a violin, a mouth organ, a stock ticker, and a typewriter in his office, and he works at all of 'em while he's signing his mail with one hand and composing a symphony in G minor with the other."

"He certainly has got his work systemized," admitted Philbert.

"System ain't the word," said Hazel, scratching her wrist on her shingle bob. "When he works he works all over, and they say he sleeps in a combination folding bed and roll-top desk."

"He labors almost as hard as we committee clerks do," admitted Philbert.

"I peeked into his office the other morning, and, my dear, it just wore me out to look at him."

"Was he working?" asked Philbert.

"Working! Listen! Gen. Dawes was working so hard you couldn't see him move. He was dictating his correspondence to his private secretary, Miss Helen Maria, that red-headed Chicago girl, and there wasn't a table left standing on its legs. All the chairs were broken up and piled in the corner, and the shovel and tongs from the fireplace littered up the place."

"I guess he uses up a lot of stationery in the course of a session," Philbert agreed.

"That shows you don't know him," interrupted Hazel. "My dear, since he's been here they can't keep the steampipes down in the basement covered to save their lives. Dave Lynn told me that last winter the expense was something frightful."

"Explain it to me, please," said Philbert, with a puzzled look.

"Helen don't use anything but asbestos to write on."

"That illuminates something," said Philbert. "I heard my Senator tell Charlie Curtis the other day that the more Gen. Dawes warmed up the colder the Senate got."

"That's the reason."

"Still, it wasn't likely the Senate was going to change the rules just because Gen. Dawes wanted 'em to," said Philbert.

* * * *

"THAT'S what I said," agreed Hazel. "I told Helen Maria the other day. I said, 'Helen,' I said, 'I've been here longer than you have, and when you've been here as long as I have you won't see any way to improve the rules either,' I said.

"That's right," said Philbert. "Take rule 1, clause 8, section 3, f'r instance. That rule provides the scale of pay for the clerks and stenographers, blondes, $1,600 per annum, and up; brunettes, plain, $1,800 per annum; brunettes, with blue eyes, $1,950 per annum, and red-headed girls what they can get, ranging all the way from $720 per annum, up to four grand per annum."

"When I explained that to Helen Maria she saw right off that one was a good rule," said Hazel.

"Certainly it's a good rule," admitted Philbert. "Suppose a Senator needs a new stenographer to help him brush up on the Charleston, does he have to take the prize-winner of the Commercial Business college, sight unseen?"

"Heaven forbid!"

"Certainly not," said Philbert. "Under rule 9 he just fills out a blank giving the plans and specifications, and the next afternoon when he comes down to perform the arduous labors of the day he can tell right off, by the style of bonnet hanging on the hatrack, that he's got a perfect 36 with bobbed brown hair and soulful eyes."

"That's the only kind could wear that kind of a hat," admitted Hazel.

Senator Smoot was down on his knees just begging Mister Heflin to make a speech.

"I don't think the Senate could improve that rule," said Philbert, "and so far as I'm concerned I'm glad it didn't try."

"That's what I told Helen Maria," said Hazel, "and—of course, it's confidential—she agreed with me."

"Take rule 23," Philbert went on argumentatively. "That rule provides that the Senate meets every day at 12 o'clock noon. What does that mean? That means that the very minute a Senator reports for work he gets an hour off for lunch."

"When I explained that one to Helen Maria," said Hazel, "she admitted to me privately, you know, that she didn't blame the Senate for not changing it."

"Certainly not," said Philbert. "And take the rule about a permanent pair, f'r instance."

"What's that?" asked Hazel.

* * * *

"A PERMANENT pair," explained Philbert, "is one-half of a foursome."

"That is a good rule," conceded Hazel.

"Certainly it's a good rule. Two permanent pairs make a championship match."

"People ought to know more about the Senate," said Hazel. "Then they wouldn't criticize it so."

"The Senate ought to step out now and then," explained Philbert. "There ain't enough pep in it."

"A little more gin in the orange juice is certainly what it needs," conceded Hazel. "It's been so dead this session I feel as if I'd been working down at the Congressional cemetery."

"I sure am glad it's through."

"Maybe somebody'll step on the gas next winter," said Hazel, hopefully.

"Vice President Dawes might help things along by offering a prize for the longest speech."

"That's what the Senate needs," admitted Hazel.

"Certainly it needs it," agreed Philbert. "Senators are too reticent."

"Why, the other morning," said Hazel, "my Senator was talking to Mr. Jim Watson about what to do with the balance of the session, and Mr. Watson was just discouraged. I never saw a more dejected man."

"Explain it to me, please," said Philbert.

* * * *

"HE'D been sitting up all night with Mr. Tom Heflin, of Alabama, trying to get him to make a speech."

"Nothing is impossible to Jim Watson," interrupted Philbert. "That man would tackle anything."

"Well, the next day, my dear, said Hazel, "I was passing Mr. Heflin's committee room, and Senator Reed Smoot was in there, begging and pleading with him to take the floor and say a few words on the subject of the Federal reserve bank. Mr. Smoot was down on his knees, when I peeked through the crack of the door, crying and carrying on, my dear, something pitiful, just begging him to make a speech, if only for a couple of hours, or so, but Mr. Heflin said no, he said he didn't know anything about the question and couldn't say a word until he has studied up on it."

"It would be a terrible thing for Congress if everybody was like Senator Heflin," admitted Philbert. "There wouldn't be any speeches, and where would our jobs be. Answer me that one."

"It would be good-by to the Senate," admitted Hazel dejectedly.

"Maybe if there were prizes offered for the longest speeches Senator King might be induced to let people find out some of the things he knows," said Philbert.

"It's a good idea, and I think I'll tip Helen Maria off," said Hazel. "She'll pass the idea on to the Vice President."

"Maybe the Senate could remedy the deplorable situation by passing a few laws," said Philbert, hopefully.

"That's contrary to the rules and regulations of the House of Representatives," explained Hazel.

"Well, something ought to be done to save the country," said Philbert. "Pro Bunko Publico."

"What's that?" asked Hazel suspiciously.

"That's a Latin motto," said Philbert loftily, "and means, 'do the public good.'"

"Helen Maria says that's the Senate's motto," said Hazel.

ALLIGATORS IN THE POTOMAC RIVER!

By JOHN LEE COONTZ.

WHENCE came the saurians that infest the Potomac? The learned and the unlearned are mystified. Seven to date have been the toll from these historic waters. Conjecture is rife. Some say that they are escaped pets; others that they have come up from the Florida coast. The bureau of fisheries declares that alligators can not breed this far north.

So the matter rests. In the meanwhile a Washingtonian fishing down the river about four miles from the city shoots a "queer looking reptile," which, upon being hauled ashore, proves to be an alligator; and down at the municipal wharf a fishmonger buys a 3-foot alligator; and in from Bolling field drifts a report of five alligators captured.

The canoeist, the swimmer and others of Washington, who find life's summer ease on the Potomac—are they in danger? Well, it is hardly to be thought so, as the alligators caught are not over 3 and 4 feet long—baby alligators. But baby alligators must have mamma alligators. And this leads back to the fisheries bureau again, which says that alligators can not breed this far north.

But whence came the alligators? That is the question; and no one seems to be able to solve it. If they are pets, as has been suggested, where is the pet alligator farm from which they escaped? That suggestion as to their advent is not far from the one given by a facetious youth, down by the river, discussing them the other day. He charged that they were Florida alligators that got into the bootleg territory off the coast of Florida and roaming around under the influence of the "without which a party is not a party," found themselves in the Washington territory, and mistaking the realty boom here for that in Florida, thought themselves home and made themselves so, accordingly.

While all of this is a pretty story—barring the realty part—it can not, of course, be considered. It is quite doubtful if the young alligators came from Florida at all by themselves. They are too small.

A more likely story is their having been brought from Florida by persons who have been sojourning there and let escape to the river or else taken purposely to its shores and cast therein. A great many tourists make the Southern State every year, some wise and some not so wise. And it is not improbable that many of them, traveling by automobile, fascinated with the 'gators of the mudbanks of waters there, gathered a number of them for pets. As they came north their "pets" grew and with them the problem of caring for them. The natural way out of this new-horn dilemma was to consign their little friends to the waters of the nearest coastal stream. These streams need not have been the Potomac in every instance, but in many instances, perhaps, so.

Such an explanation of the presence of the alligators here may not be scientific, but it has the element, at least, of plausibility. And what is a scientific theory itself unless it is plausible? In this case, until some one comes along and says that he has personal knowledge of how the Southern aquatic citizens got here, one opinion is as good as another.

Last summer a resident of Alexandria went out to view the new house he was constructing. The night before it had rained and in a hole by the foundation the water had formed a small pond. What was his surprise in walking by the side of this waterhole to see sunning on its banks a very fine specimen of alligator! He was not so large, but he was all there just the same. How he got there none could tell. He was invited to take a trip to the Washington zoo, where he now sojourns. At first it was thought he had escaped from the zoo, but a careful check-up out at that institution denied him the honor.

The question arises: Will there be any more? Nobody knows. But if seven have been captured there is good reason to believe that others will come along. In this there are possibilities for the summer canoeists. Instead of languidly passing away a delightful day on the broad river in uneventful frivolities, why not organize an "Alligator Research club" and spend the summer hunting for them up and down the river. In addition to real fun, there is the possibility of real adventure in the occupation.

But these speculations lead away from the real question. That question is: How did these alligators get into the Potomac? That is what the men who have captured them want to know; it is what the bather wants to know; it is what the canoeist wants to know—in fact, it is what most of Washingtonians who like to have the whys and wherefores of things explained, want to know.

And it is ventured that the bureau of fisheries would like to know.

Aardvark Hard to Capture.

The aardvarks, grotesque little animals with heavy piglike body, kangaroo tails, long ears and dinosaurian claws, are most interesting creatures. It was not more than 20 years ago that an English scientist first reported their existence, and was immediately discredited as an adherent of the truth. Even when he exhibited the strange dinosaurian claws, skull and skeleton of the aardvark, fellow scientists told him that they didn't believe there was any such animal, nor had there been since the prehistoric times. But subsequent explorers confirmed the report, and finally a live specimen was taken to London.

The aardvark eats ants, tearing up their hills with its great claws and thrusting its long, sticky tongue into the squirming thousands of inhabitants. Aardvark is Boer for ground pig. It is not in the least ferocious, but mighty hard to capture. It burrows into the ground so rapidly that it takes a force of six men with picks a couple of hours to catch up with it. It is a strong little beast, too, although it is no larger than a domestic pig.

Agile little natives who have been set to watch a hole have manfully made barehanded grabs at the emerging aardvark, only to be dragged bodily back into its burrow unless they let go. It can drag a grown man helter-skelter along the open country until he is shaken off.

When their holes are dug into, just as apt as not, instead of an aardvark, a python will be found with the anteater digesting peacefully in its stomach. The great snakes crawl into the aardvark's burrow, swallow the occupant, lay their eggs and then coil up and go to sleep for a couple of weeks in perfect luxury. Nor are they the only native beast that usurp the aardvark's home. Nearly every other animal that has a desire for cave-dwelling just moves in and makes himself at home. The aardvark is the billeting officer of the jungle and plain.

New Steel for Small Houses.

A light structural steel which can be used in the building of small houses in much the same manner in which heavy beams are used in skyscrapers has been perfected recently by a Pittsburgh manufacturer, says Popular Science Monthly. The new steel, while light in weight, is said to have greater proportional strength than any other steel so far produced. It can be used for floors and roofs as well as for beams.

SHE WANTED HER TO SHRINK.

Little Ellen heard it explained that "shrink" means "to grow smaller." A few evenings later we went to a movie and in front of Ellen's seat sat a very stout woman. After squirming around for some time in her seat, trying to look past the wide shoulders of the woman in front, Ellen leaned over and whispered: "Please, lady, do you mind shrinking a little so I can see the picture?"

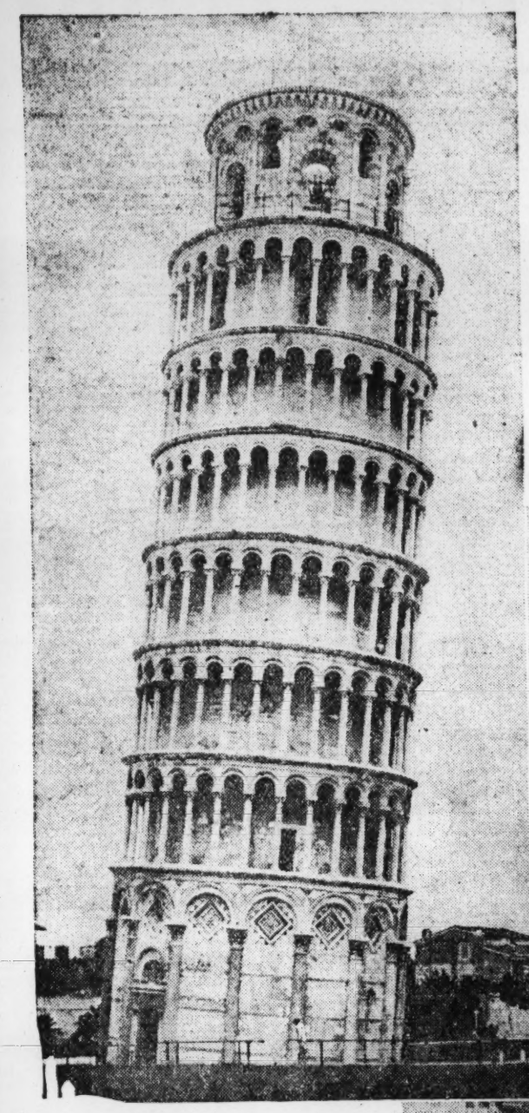

NO SPECIAL CLASSES.

"How is it," asked a police magistrate of a culprit haled before him for robbery, "that you managed to take this man's watch from his vest pocket when it was secured by a patent safety catch?"

"My fee, you honor," replied the man politely and with dignity, "is $10 for the full course of six lessons."—From Everybody's Magazine for July.

Ruin Menacing Many of Europe's Greatest Wonders

Magnificent Cathedrals, Historic Palaces and Other Famous Pieces of Architecture Crumbling to Pieces in Spite of Everything That Can Be Done to Save Them

The famous leaning tower of Pisa which is leaning so much more than it used to that its collapse is threatened.

MANY of the hundreds of thousands of Americans who visit Europe this summer may be more fortunate in their trip than they now realize. They are likely to see a number of Europe's wonders which they could not see if they were to postpone their trip even for a year or two.

For an appalling number of Europe's greatest wonders—majestic cathedrals, historic palaces and beautiful specimens of architecture of every kind—are threatened with complete ruin. The condition of many of them is so serious that, even if the huge sums necessary to undertake their repair and restoration are immediately forthcoming, it is doubtful if they can be saved.

The world's third largest cathedral at Cologne, the Leaning Tower of Pisa, the remarkable example of ecclesiastical Gothic architecture, embodied in the cathedral at Amiens, the largest and finest church in Russia—these are only a few of Europe's outstanding wonders of antiquity which are in danger of collapse and whose fate is believed to be sealed in spite of everything architects and engineers might do to save them.

None of these great architectural monuments owes its present alarming condition to damage received in the war's bombardments, but their impending ruin is in every case a result of the neglect which the war brought.

Lack of money and man power while the conflict raged and for many years afterward made it impossible for them to be given any of the attention they formerly received and which was so necessary to their preservation. For many years the ravages wrought by wind and weather have gone unrepaired and this neglect has greatly hastened the natural deterioration of the ancient structures.

Dispatches from Germany report that the dome of the great cathedral at Cologne is fast becoming a menace to the city. An appeal has been made to the Prussian state for funds to carry out reconstruction work, but some architects are of the opinion that even the most extensive repairs can not long postpone the cathedral's collapse.

The threatened ruin of Cologne cathedral is primarily due to the fact that the stones used in the additions made to the building in the sixteenth century came from different quarries than those which supplied the stones used in the dome three centuries earlier, and they are not nearly so well adapted to resisting the ravages of time. As a result the enormous weight of the towers is rapidly causing the stones underneath to crumble.

This crumbling has been going on for a long time, but formerly the cathedral had the funds to keep a large force of masons continually at work renewing the weakened portions. These funds were wiped out by the inflation following the war and, as the cathedral authorities have thus far been unable to replace them, the repair work is five years behind the schedule set by architects as necessary for the preservation of this splendid pile of Gothic architecture.

Engineering experts who have been studying the problem declare that eventually all the construction work done in the sixteenth century must be removed. But even when this is done some of them are doubtful if the cathedral can long be preserved.

Close on the heels of the discovery that the Cologne cathedral was in danger of crumbling to pieces comes the announcement that the beautiful Mayence cathedral also is in jeopardy.

The cathedral, parts of which are 900 years old, is known as the "Hoodoo House of Worship" because of the numerous misfortunes it has suffered through fire, earthquake and war.

The cathedral's unlucky streak started on the day, in 1011, Archbishop Willigis dedicated the edifice as a completed whole. Fire destroyed a considerable portion of the interior.

Now the pile foundation supports have rotted so that one engineer said he was amazed that the edifice has not collapsed.

The fact that the Leaning Tower of Pisa is leaning so much more than it ever intended to that something must be done at once to prevent its toppling is admitted in the report just made by the special commission of engineers appointed by the Italian government to investigate the stability of this masterpiece of fourteenth century architecture.

The commission found that the tower's variation from the vertical at the top is enough greater than it was 150 years ago to render imperative that measures be taken at once for the safety of this great artistic curiosity.

A dispatch from Leningrad the other day announces that serious fissures have developed in the great granite monolithic columns of the Cathedral of St. Isaac, the largest and finest church in Russia.

Built upon submerged wooden piles, as are most of the buildings of Leningrad, the magnificent edifice, which cost $15,000,000 to build, has been steadily subsiding. Great perpendicular cracks appeared in one column facing Alexandra park, and the portico which it supports is threatened with collapse.

Repairs and shoring work, which had been in progress for 50 years to prevent the cathedral from sinking into the swampy soil, were abandoned after the bolshevik revolution, and the safety of the whole structure now is threatened.

Another historic and beautiful cathedral whose plight is equally hopeless is the Cathedral of Notre Dame at Amiens, France. This cathedral ranks with those of Rheims, Chartres, Bourges, Rouen, Paris and Strasbourg as a surpassing example of ecclesiastical Gothic architecture.

The peril of the cathedral at Amiens is due to the sinking of the ground on which it stands and engineers and architects have no way of remedying this condition.

Another historic structure that is disappearing like the cathedral at Amiens is the Cathedral de Havre, the feudal home of the Enghien family in the Belgian province of Hainaut. It is slowly but surely sinking from view as a result of the infiltration of the earth by water from a nearby canal. In the last 25 years it has sunk a distance of 4 yards.

The strained state of French finances during the past twelve years has made it impossible for either the national or the local authorities to attempt to keep historic edifices in anything like good condition. As a result there is momentary danger of many disasters like that which recently overtook the sixteenth century church of Notre Dame de la Dalbade in Toulouse.

The 259-foot steeple of this church collapsed, destroying two of the beautiful chapels and burying several nearby buildings under an avalanche of bricks.

What the ancient buildings of France and every other European country need more than anything else is what is known as the waterproofing treatment. This consists in heating the stone to a temperature of 250 degrees Fahrenheit by means of an electric air blast and then painting melted paraffin on the walls. The paraffin makes the walls immune to rain and snow.

The tumble-down condition of so many of Europe's ancient buildings explodes forever the popular notion that as far as long durability was concerned the builders of medieval times and before quite outdid the builders of today. The notion probably had its origin in the fact nowadays we usually build only for the next generation or so and seldom undertake a structure with a view to seeing how enduring we can make it.

As a matter of fact, modern science and engineering skill make possible a durability so much greater than that which could be attained in earlier times that there is really no comparison.

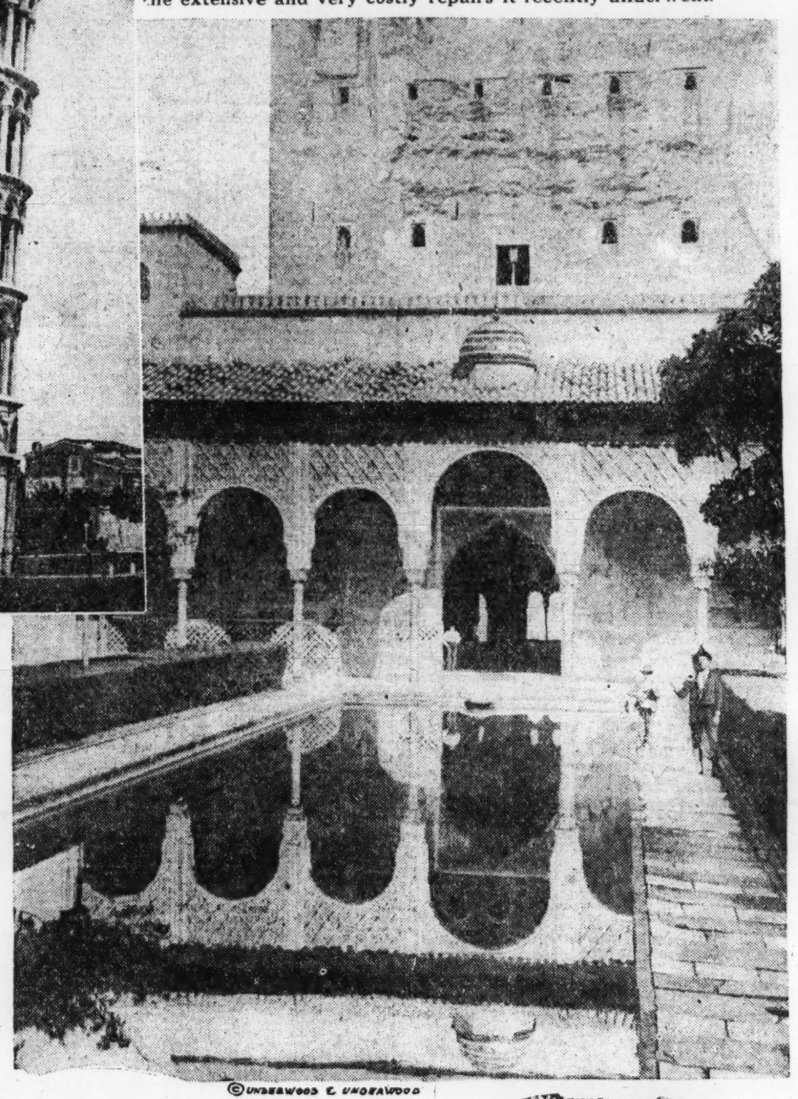

Moisture collecting in the massive walls and turning to ice when the weather is cold are serious menaces to a stone building. The builders of the medieval cathedrals and castles had no effective way of guarding against them.

But in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, now building in New York, the masonry is supplied with an elaborate drainage system of brass and copper conduits. These conduits are electrically wired so that when ice forms in them it can be quickly melted by turning on the current.

There seems good reason to believe that, barring earthquakes and similar catastrophes, this modern cathedral will endure many centuries longer than any of Europe's ancient ones.

Does Romance Ruin Marriage?

"Why is it," a frenzied, overworked American business man burst out the other day, "why is it that women demand so much attention?"

It seems to me the true answer lies in the extremely sentimental attitude toward marriage held by men and women alike in this country. To us marriage is a love affair or it is nothing—a point of view natural to youth, but which, with us, continues to the grave. This at least is our ideal. It is in the frantic pursuit of this ideal that American women make the demand for romantic attentions from their husbands.

There is no doubt about it, though foreigners can not understand or believe it, the frequency of divorce in America is the logical outcome of our romantic conceptions of marriage.

For this reason much of the opposition to divorce is futile; those opposed talk about obligations, duty, the welfare of children; but they do not urge the only potent argument, that marriage itself stands for an emotion, a special, peculiar, deep and enduring emotion, which is no romantic love, or physical attraction, or friendship, or copartnership, although it partakes a little of all of these; it is just marriage—the emotion two people have for each other when they have been married a reasonable length of time. It is unique and long-lived; how satisfactory it is is another question.

We might even divorce a little less frequently if we came to realize that divorce does not completely free us from an undesirable partner; our ex-husbands and wives do not drop wholly out of our consciousness, but can always command an emotion till death us do part, an emotion of shame or of pride, of love or of hate—whatever it may be—but certainly an emotion, the emotion of matrimony.—Alice Duer Miller in the Delineator for July.

Unsuspected Talent.

The country judge had been solemnly warned against picking up strangers in his flivver, but he had a gun on this trip to Los Angeles and for once he was reckless. He picked up a timid looking little man and they rode amicably for miles. But when the judge looked for the time, his watch was gone!

Pulling up alongside the highway, he shoved his gun into the little man's stomach and growled in just as tough a voice as he could muster under the circumstances:

"Hand over that watch!"

The passenger turned a sickly yellow, but he protested feebly.

"One word more, and I'll plug yuh," shouted the judge valiantly. With trembling fingers the offending party hauled out a watch and passed it over. Then he clambered out of the car and scuttled off into the chaparral.

Burton Holmes Looks Backward

Burton Holmes is the world authority unrivaled in his field, on where to go, what to see, and how to see it. For 33 years he has journeyed to every quarter of the globe, each of his trips lasting six months. The remaining six he spends in the United States, giving his famous illustrated travelogues, by means of which he takes his audiences to far countries and distant scenes, or back with him through their own country.

This year, he did cover some new ground, in his trip to Angkor the Great. He considers it the finest contribution he has ever made to the travel platform.

"Angkor the Great," he remarks, "was a city of 1,000,000 people. It flourished as the capital of the conquering and triumphant empire of the Khmers, from the ninth to the twelfth century. Then mysteriously it fell, was abandoned, and became overgrown by the jungle. It is only beginning to attract the attention of the world today—a new wonder of an ancient earth. In Angkor, you find the remains of a great metropolis, its walls, its bridges, palaces, and temples finely sculptured. Upon the walls of the temple corridors, or galleries, many miles in length are pictures, sculptured in relief, which tell the whole story of the lives of this vanished race, who left no written record. Their public ceremonies, victorious campaigns, and incidental happenings are all depicted. The existence of Angkor is known to us only through its superb ruins, there in the tropical forest of Cambodia, French Indo-China. These ruins are amazingly well preserved, and hold a special atmosphere created by the jungle which has gripped them."—From Everybody's Magazine for July.

The Truth About the Beauty-Baited Trap The Blackmailers Set for Sir Hari Singh

Captain Arthur, Trusted Friend of the Rich Indian Potentate, Reveals for the First Time the Amazing Details of the Plot That Cost the Rajah Nearly a Million Dollars and Imperiled His Chance of a Throne

In the most courtly manner Madame Helene presented her nieces and their friends from the boarding school and as the rajah shook their hands they bent their knees in pretty little curtsies. There was a surprisingly large number of the girls but none too many, it seemed, to suit Sir Hari Singh. His face was wreathed with smiles and he was quite evidently delighted to find the young women just as his hostess had described—wonderfully good looking, lively and inclined to be a bit flirtatious.

By CAPT. J. C. ARTHUR
Late of the British Army and Long the Trusted Friend and Adviser of Sir Hari Singh

CHAPTER IV

WHEN plain John Smith or Bill Jones packs a pair of suitcases and a steamer trunk, obtains a passport and a steamship ticket and sails for Europe the chances are that he will see the same sights and do the same things that hundreds of thousands of tourists see and do there every year. A few get into trouble, a few have their day of grand adventure and romance. But so far as the circles of aristocratic and exclusive society are concerned, and the equally exclusive circles of the demi monde that is reserved for persons of wealth and distinction, your ordinary traveler might as well have stayed at home.

And this holds true for most American tourists, even if Europeans look upon every blessed one of them as millionaires out to scatter a fortune in a few weeks of luxurious entertainment.

When the Rajah Sir Hari Singh adventured into Europe for a year's stay he faced a world torn and paralyzed by a devastating war. The armistice had been declared only a few weeks before. Peace negotiations were getting under way when the rajah and a few of his Indian friends purchased a steamship outright and fitted it up for their accommodation and for the benefit of a host of British officers who wanted to get back home from the East and found the regular passenger and troop ships jammed far beyond their capacity. I have told how the rajah projected this expedition and then was forced to postpone it through the death of a relative in whose funeral ceremonies he had to participate and how afterward he gathered a fortune in cash and jewels, organized his staff and eventually set out from Bombay in the ship which had been renamed the Loyalty.

The journey through the Indian ocean, up the Red sea and on through the Mediterranean took a full three weeks. We landed at Marseilles with Paris and London to the north and the gay Riviera lying along the coast to the east, fairly beckoning to the rajah with its thousand sybaritic pleasures and enticements.

It was the first time that Sir Hari Singh had been in Europe. He had been educated by European tutors, had studied all about the great nations of the Occident, spoke several European languages fluently and was widely read in Western literature.

But no amount of book lore or of expert teaching could match the experience of actuality. The life he saw in the famous Avenue Cannebiere of Marseilles made him gasp with wonder and astonishment. Marseilles is closely linked with the Orient, for there come the great freighters and passenger liners from the East and the teeming life of the city is a perfect chaos of languages, nationalities and racial types from every section of the earth.

We made arrangements to be accommodated at a palatial hotel in one of the elegant side streets in the heart of Marseilles. When we reached the great hostelry, the rajah, accustomed though he was to what passed for luxury in his own land, simply could not believe his eyes. The fittings of his bedroom startled him into wordless admiration. Hotel rooms as he knew them in India were the barest sort of abodes with merely a bed and a chair and a portable bathtub. Here, instead of whitewashed walls, he saw velvet portieres and tapestries, of soft silks.

He fairly chirped with joy as he examined all of the modern conveniences with which this apartment—it was the finest the hotel afforded, of course—was fitted and he immediately began making notes of them with the expressed purpose of introducing similar comforts and luxuries into Kashmir.

In the rajah's wake were four of his personal servants carrying immense bags and bundles. They were no less startled than their master. When they entered the bedroom with its canopied bed and pulled down the silken coverlets they uttered all sorts of exclamations. Here was a bed fitted out with mattress and sheets and covers, an impossible thing to imagine in India where everybody carries his own bedding even when asked to be a guest at a private residence. What were they to do?

They held an excited conference in their native tongue and then proceeded to remove all of the spreads and sheets and the mattress which they carefully rolled up and placed in a corner. The bed spring added to their mystification and I think this was in process of removal also when the rajah entered his bedroom and found what they were doing. He called me and between us we managed to get them to put back all the bedding and restore the room to its original appearance.

Ali Beg and I had told the rajah repeatedly that it would be unnecessary, and almost impossible for that matter, to carry great loads of personal bedding all over Europe, but the prince had insisted that such a thing as a bed already made up for the night was unthinkable and that he must have his own private bedding just as he would require his own toothbrush and towels.

He was soon convinced that European methods were both desirable and effective and the immediate result was that four of his body servants were sent back to India on the next boat. They were no longer needed to lug bedding about.

The rajah lost no time in hurrying out to see the sights and the time was most propitious. It was the late spring and the Cote D'Azur was at its best. The gayeties of the Riviera were still at their height and the presence of this exotically garbed and handsome Oriental prince soon attracted to him much attention and social notice. It wasn't long thereafter that the rajah began to learn a great deal more about white women and their ways than a lifetime in India could have taught him.

The only Caucasian women he had met in far-off Kashmir were English and they had looked upon him either indifferently or with a sort of detached hauteur. In India there is a racial and social barrier between the whites and the native Indians no matter of how high a rank that none question and few transgress. Many English women had enjoyed the hospitality of the rajah in his white marble palace and had gone boating with him on the lotus-covered Shalimar Bagh. They had basked in the sunshine and shadow tracery of his floating islands on Lake Dahl, but always the barrier had been religiously and impersonally observed. They had looked upon the prince as an inferior, a man apart from a white woman's attention or thought because his skin was darker than theirs, his habits different from those of their own civilization and basically because they and their men were the representatives of British raj or rule over a multitudinous but really subject people.

Now the facts are that Sir Hari's skin is lighter than most Indians and he is of Aryan stock. He had an excellent military training and presented a fine, erect figure, youthful, proud and attractive in facial expression. He was 27 years old at the time, tall, rather heavy, a finished horseman and a keen polo player. He ate with his hands, it is true, but that is a custom in Kashmir where people believe it is healthier to eat with clean hands than with "eating instruments" which any one may have had in his mouth. You might think this a rather unpleasant practice. But in Kashmir and elsewhere throughout the East there is always a servant behind the diner, ready with a bowl of scented water and a towel. The moment the guest has touched food and carried it to his mouth with his hand the servant adroitly passes the bowl of water under his elbow and lets him dip his hands into it.

Still the proud English ladies could never bring themselves to consider the rajah as one who sprung from the same racial stock as their own. He was a man who ate with his hands and such a man must be a barbarian. That great considerations of hygiene were responsible originally for such customs in a country often swept by cholera and other infectious plagues, of course, never entered their minds.

It was the thought of a high and well nigh insurmountable social barrier between him and every white skinned woman that the rajah took away with him from Kashmir. He had also an impression of the "moral superiority" of European women. When he landed at Marseilles he firmly believed that the women of Europe would never give him a second glance, that the barrier was raised high here as it was in the East and that while he might meet women, their interest in him would be coldly impersonal.

Imagine his surprise and delight, therefore, when he discovered that some of the chic young demoiselles in the tea room of the hotel seemed inclined to make him the center of their interest and anxious to make his acquaintance. It gave the lonesome prince an entirely new viewpoint and led him to take a new zest in his inspections of the hotel and the boulevards. He was immensely encouraged and flattered. This trip to Europe, he thought, might not be such a formal enterprise after all.

It was then that the "diplomatic mission" of Maboob Ali Beg, aid de camp to the rajah, began to make itself apparent. Maboob had been educated in Europe, was suave and polished and thoroughly familiar with Western customs and weaknesses. It was beginning to be apparent that he was attached to the rajah's party through some machination of the reigning potentate of Kashmir and that the welfare of the princely traveler was by no means his concern.

I have often thought that Maboob was sent on this European journey expressly to undermine the reputation of Sir Hari Singh so that the people at home and the British government officials should see in him a prince so ridden with scandals and excesses that he would be deemed unworthy to succeed the old maharajah as ruler under any circumstances.

From the time when the rajah's friend and confidant found himself unable to make the journey as aid de camp through requirements of an official nature which suddenly arose in Kashmir, I believed that there was something of the sort brewing. Maboob's appearance on the scene promptly thereafter and the swift and easy manner in which he arranged to make the trip added to my suspicions. So I was not at all surprised from what I knew of the intrigues of Indian government circles that this oily aid de camp eventually became the evil influence in the rajah's life.

And so it was that the first signs of feminine appraisal and interest in the rajah in Marseilles found him and Maboob conversing in low but animated tones over a lemonade in the garden tea room. They were enjoying the bright sunshine and also the flirtatious glances of the pretty women who sat nearby and I could very well imagine what they were talking about. I strolled over to them and sat down at their table. Sir Hari had asked me to forego formality with him at all times, even to the extent of entering his rooms without knocking. So I now availed myself of this flattering prerogative.

"I tell you," Maboob was saying to the rajah, "Mme. Helene's home is the finest in Marseilles and her nieces and their girl friends are the most beautiful young women in Europe. The late King Edward himself knew Mme. Helene well and used to visit her every time he landed at Marseilles. His room is one of the curiosities of her palace. Madame entertains lavishly and there is scarcely a high British officer in the Indian service or the navy who does not know her and her exquisite protegees."

"Your first step in romance on European soil could not be more appropriately guided than in the direction of Mme. Helene's sumptuous villa with its private motion picture theater and its ballroom fitted with a floor of heavy plate glass mirrors. You will find that French women are not like the English women you have met in Kashmir. Oh, no! Let us all accept Mme. Helene's invitation tonight and I will guarantee you the most enjoyable evening of your life."

Maboob became more impassioned with eloquence as he went on to describe the beauties of the sprightly French girls and soon had the rajah inflamed with interest and curiosity. I knew, of course, what the aid de camp was up to. But I had not contracted to accompany the rajah as his moral guardian. Further I was too aware of the proprieties of Indian etiquette to try to cross the path of the crafty Maboob. If I had opposed him I suspect that I soon would have found myself laid up with one of those mysterious ailments that make Indian politics so unpopular with Europeans. It was not my affair.

So it was that we dined rather elaborately at the hotel that evening and about 11 o'clock went to pay our respects to Mme. Helene. Her home was really luxurious, a little palace set in the midst of exotic gardens and overlooking the Mediterranean. It was conducted in the grand manner with footmen in [illegible] dent livery and everything that would give the impression of a place of luxury and distinction.

Mme. Helene received us in as magnificent

Buying Food in Hot Weather

In hot weather, when meats, sea-foods, fruits and vegetables deteriorate quickly, every housewife should be able to detect those which are unfit for food when offered for sale.

With the exception of milk, perhaps, there is no food that requires greater care in selection that does fish. It is not so much the kind as the condition of the fish that is important.

A fresh fish will not pit under pressure of the finger; it is unsound if the flesh parts. Many dealers will strip a bit of flesh from the backbone to show its condition. This is a pretty sure test, for if decomposition has begun at all no particle of meat will adhere to the bone; it will leave it clear and clean. It is usually good, therefore, if it is not easily stripped from the bone. A diffuse red line on the underside of the backbone is a positive indication that decomposition has started, or is strongly present, according to the depths of the color. If the abdominal walls show well-marked discoloration and have a soft, red, pulpy appearance, decay is well-established. The scales, too, should not be easily detachable or rubbed off and should be bright and glistening. If the eyeballs of the fish are collapsed, gray and dull, do not purchase it.

Trouble lurks in shell-fish, lobsters and crabs unless they are very fresh. How can you distinguish the good from the bad? A fresh live lobster is green, quick in its movements, and when its tail is lifted up it springs back under it. When choosing a boiled lobster, pull out its tail; if it springs back, it indicates the lobster was alive when boiled; if the tail is limp, it is safest to pass it by.

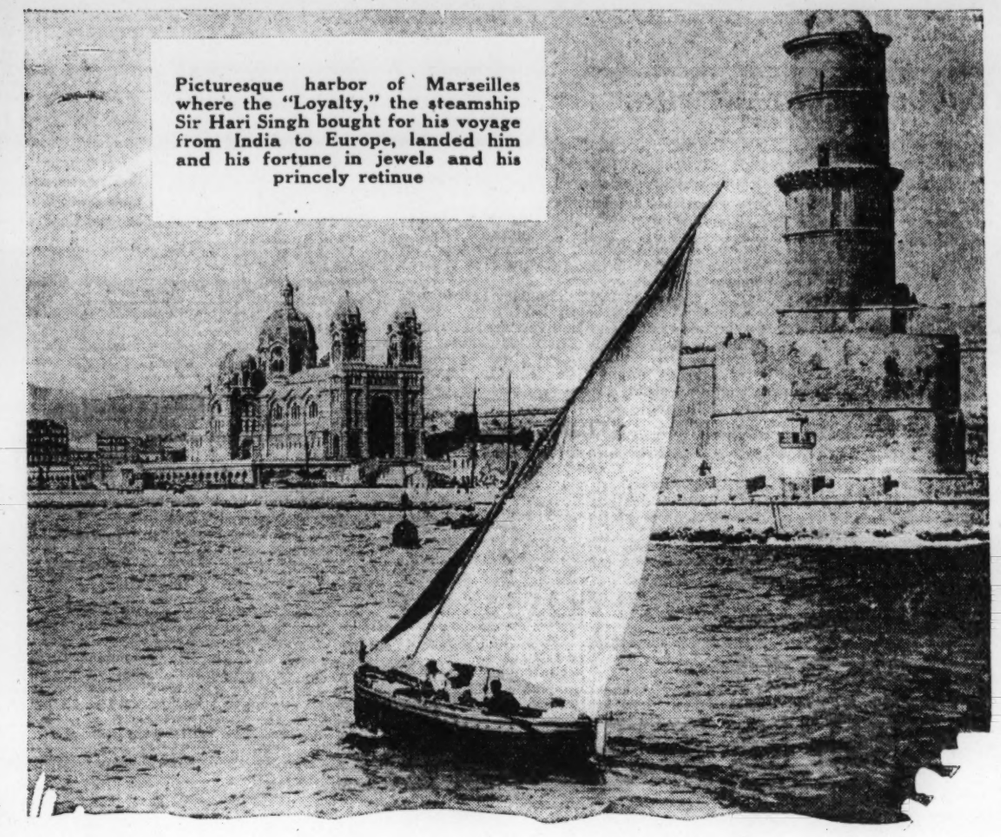

A rough-and-ready test of crabs is to feel under the large claws to see if they are sticky. If they are, do not buy them. If the "apron" has a dull, faded appearance, it is a clear index of unfreshness. The joints of a fresh crab are stiff.

The greatest care is necessary when oysters and clams are bought in the shell, for they are very poisonous if not fresh. If healthy, the shell is always tightly closed, or if slightly open, will close at once if touched. Failure to do this indicates the bivalve is either weak or dead. When first opened they should have a clear-cut, shape and creamy color. Oysters are sometimes soaked in water after being taken from the shell in order to plump them.

If you do not want to court sickness by ptomaine poisoning, keep away from all but the best meat. Meat which is only a little tainted is really spoiled meat and you take a chance every time you eat it.

Always reject any meat which is not firm under the pressure of the finger, and choose only that which shows clearly the branching veins. Beef or mutton should be a deep rose color, with the fat a rich cream. Hard and skinny fat shows the animal was old before being butchered and is therefore tough. If in doubt of the freshness of veal, look under the kidneys and flaps of the breast, as the color changes here more quickly than any other place.—From the Designer Magazine for July.

The Truth About the Beauty-Baited Trap the Blackmailers Set for Sir Hari Singh

Picturesque harbor of Marseilles where the "Loyalty," the steamship Sir Hari Singh bought for his voyage from India to Europe, landed him and his fortune in jewels and his princely retinue

WHEN the celebrated case of "Mr. A" was in the English courts Judge Darling described Capt. J. C. Arthur, author of this series of articles, as the "biggest villain unhanged." The British authorities allege that he was the master mind of the bold plot to rob Sir Hari Singh, now the Maharajah of Kashmir and Jammu. Only last winter they had him arrested in Paris and unsuccessfully tried to extradite him to England.

But Capt. Arthur, Irishman and former officer in the British army, declares that he is innocent of these charges. He insists that the government is persecuting him for political reasons. In these pages from week to week he will present for the first time his side of the case and give what he maintains is the real truth—just why and how the blackmail trap was set and by whom.

Capt. Arthur was long the trusted friend and adviser of Sir Hari Singh. He accompanied him from India on his memorable European trip. He shared his magnificent luxury and had intimate knowledge of the way the rajah was continually menaced by the wiles of women and the plots of desperate men. All this makes what Capt. Arthur has to tell here a wonderfully thrilling narrative of love, mystery, intrigue and adventure.

a drawing room in the style of Louis XIV as I had ever seen. It was perfect in its fittings and might have been a room in the palace of Versailles so far as artistic taste and quiet dignity were concerned. She was very pleased and honored to receive the rajah and his friends.

"I am so glad you were able to come," she said to Sir Hari. "For a while I was afraid that my invitation would reach your highness too late, but good fortune was with me. I shall be happy to present my three young nieces to your highness, but must ask your indulgence for their lack of savoir faire. The young rascals had the impudence to ask many of the girls at their boarding school to come here tonight and see a real rajah, as they put it, and I do hope you will forgive this dreadful faux pas on the part of my feather-brained nieces. But they are lovely girls, your highness, though they are inclined to be a bit flirtatious. Their friends from boarding school are a rather lively lot, too, but er—er——"

Mme. Helene, who spoke beautiful English, had reached the end of her breath. The rajah helped her out by showing a deep interest in the furniture.

"I hear you have entertained King Edward," he said at length.

"Oh, many times," our aristocratic hostess replied with a proud toss of her Mme. Pompadour head. "If you desire, I will show you the room where his majesty often deigned to repose after gracing my drawing room with his presence."

It was another Louis XIV room, beautifully appointed and with a bed of majestic proportions partly hidden by draperies that fell from the baldaquin in the painted and sculptured ceiling.

"This is where King Edward would spend the night," said Mme. Helene in a half-whisper of deference to the regal memory of it. "He was such a perfect gentleman."

A short while later madame introduced her "nieces" and their young friends from boarding school, about fifteen of them. All were remarkably beautiful and none was over 20 years old. From their conversation one would gather that their education had not been neglected in any way. Some were musical and played the piano or sang. One was an artist on the harp. Most were accomplished linguists.

A negro band played for the dance later on when a few more guests arrived, including three high British officers homeward bound and a Russian prince. At 2 o'clock an excellent supper was served and then there was more dancing.

By this time we were quite well acquainted with the young ladies and several incipient little romances were h[illegible] beautifully. The next event on the [illegible] program was a series of very artis[illegible] pictures posed by the nieces [illegible] their schoolmates. Sir H[illegible] delighted for, as the hours prog[illegible] ...anding new and unexpected charm on every side. The sweet young ingenues treated him even better than he expected and by the time the allegorical pictures were over and the girls were surrounding him in their filmy costumes they were calling him "Harry" for short. Soon we were escorted into the private theater of madame where a delightful motion picture entertainment was given. In semidarkness the rajah received new assurances that he was the darling of all the girls and he quite surpassed their ideas of Oriental responsiveness.

It was well on toward broad daylight when Sir Hari Singh decided to return to the hotel, surfeited with the delights of an European "Arabian Nights" entertainment such as he had scarcely imagined before. On leaving the palace of Mme. Helene the rajah had a happy inspiration. We stood in the great vestibule, getting into our coats and quite surrounded by madame's nieces and their jolly friends.

"I am in somewhat of a predicament," said Sir Hari in his faultless English to the stately hostess. "I want to present something to our young friends here in remembrance of this unforgettable evening of sweet enjoyments, but, as I am leaving for Paris in a few hours, I will have no time to look through my things for something worthy of the occasion. Will you, madame, be gracious enough to select some trifles at your favorite jewelers and give them to these exquisite young ladies in my name?"

Madame, slightly puzzled at this proposal but nonetheless composed and serene, said she would be only too pleased to do so, whereupon Sir Hari Singh went to a small writing table that happened to be handy and wrote out a check. I glanced over his shoulder as he folded it and presented it to his now gleaming-eyed hostess.

It was for the British equivalent of $25,000!

I think I have mentioned in an earlier chapter the employment of Thomas Stanley as chauffeur for the rajah in London and testimony which he gave concerning the rajah's zest for clandestine adventure and the entertainment of beautiful women after his arrival in England. This was a side of Sir Hari's nature which I did not fully understand until it was too late to save him from becoming the central figure in an ugly scandal, gravely imperiling his chance of succeeding to the throne of Kashmir and handing over nearly a million dollars to the blackmailers.

Unfortunately for Sir Hari, his aid de camp, Maboob Ali Beg, had the insight into the innermost character of the rajah which I lacked. I am forced to believe that from the start of our European trip this crafty Oriental w[illegible] deliberately playing on the weaknesses of the rajah's character and impairing its strength with a view to encouraging just such a scandal as was revealed to me in Paris the day after Christmas in 1919.

Probably it is not to be wondered at that I did not read Sir Hari better than I did. It takes years for a Westerner to get even a little grasp of the subtle and often contradictory workings of the Eastern mind, and Sir Hari had an even more bafflingly many-sided nature than most Orientals. As Stanley, the English chauffeur points out, he was a mixture of the strangest contradictions. One minute he would be bound by the most rigid moral scruples and the next plunging into the most scandalously lawless pleasures; one minute, throwing money about with the utmost prodigality, and the next, practicing the most miserly economies.

"I have never seen a man who would scatter his wealth with as careless a hand as Sir Hari Singh," says Thomas Stanley, "nor have I ever seen one who would frequently pinch his pennies any harder. Those who tried to purchase his used motor cars when he was leaving England can testify to what a hard bargain he can drive. He wanted nearly as much for the cars as he paid for them in their splendid newness—and often he succeeded in getting it.

"Although I was in the rajah's service only a few months I got to know him better than any other man I ever worked for. I lived for a time in his London house, occupying a bedroom directly over his own. He treated me with the most friendly familiarity, never calling me anything but Tom. Sir Hari never made the slightest attempt to conceal anything from me and consequently I got interesting glimpses of gay parties. Some of these were more sensational than anything described in court when the celebrated 'Mr. A' case came on trial.

"I do not mean by all this that Sir Hari Singh was a mere profligate who thought of nothing but the pursuit of women. Before I had known him very long I came to understand that he was not the instigator of some of the most sensational parties and the most reckless flirtations in which he figured. They were planned by Indian members of the rajah's suite, who, for some reason, seemed to like to involve him in affairs of this kind and who gave him to understand that this sort of thing was quite what Europe expected of a visiting Oriental potentate.

"The rajah's affair with Mrs. Robinson that led to the shocking scandal was only one of many romances in which he became the hero during his stay in London. In Portman mansions there lived a stately beauty with whom he spent many hours every day during the first two or three weeks after his arrival in England. Day after day I used to drive the rajah and this lady to the Savoy hotel where he entertained her at luncheon or dinner. She was the first of his English 'flames,' and she was followed by many others. On his excursions about London with one beauty or another he was frequently accompanied by Ali Beg, his private secretary and aid, but never by Capt. Arthur.

"Sir Hari soon discovered that to get the fullest enjoyment out of London life he must improve his dancing and learn all the newest European steps. Night after night I used to drive him to the stage door of the theater where a famous review was running. As soon as the performance was over he would fill the limousine with a bevy of the stage beauties and take them to an exclusive club in Piccadilly. Later on he would take a smaller group to the Curzon street house where they would teach the newest dance steps for several hours.

"He thought this a great idea, for, of course, all the footlight beauties were accomplished dancers and it was so much more pleasant to have them teaching him than to be taught by a regular dancing master. For these dancing lessons he purchased a very expensive gramaphone and a huge assortment of dance records.

"Naturally I became very well known to certain types of Londoners through driving Sir Hari about. As soon as the news spread of the rajah's interest in beautiful women and his generosity toward those who took his fancy, scores of interested eyes would be turned in my direction wherever I drove, whether alone or with my master and some of his guests in the car. On more than one occasion I have seen strikingly gowned women jump into a taxi and order the chauffeur to follow my car in the hope that they would attract the attention of the rajah and be invited to share his gayeties."

After the thrilling evening at Mme. Helene's you may be sure that Sir Hari Singh was rather loath to leave Marseilles, but he became somewhat reconciled by the glowing accounts Ali Beg gave him of the delights of Parisian life. I can see him now as he listened to the extravagant tales with his low kindling Oriental eyes growing wider and wider in amazement.

On to Paris we went by the night train, and in my next chapter I will tell you of some of the interesting things that befell us there.

SPEED OF SUBMARINES

The speed of a submarine is measured in two ways, one by a log or speed indicator; this consists of a tube passing through the bottom of the vessel and extending several inches below, the lower end of the tube is closed, but an opening in the forward side gives admittance to water, as the ship moves ahead the pressure due to her speed is communicated to the column of water in the tube where it is added to the pressure due to the "head of water" outside (the weight of the water to the water line), with the result that the water in the tube rises to a height that corresponds to the speed, and which thus is a measure of the speed. Inside the tube is a float attached to a chain which passes over a sprocket wheel, connected through a suitable gearing to a pointer that shows the speed. The other is a revolution counter attached to the engines. This shows the number of turns that the propeller is making and from this they get the speed also. While running on the surface a patent log can be used, as in a surface ship. This consists of a dial on the railing at the stern of the vessel, a small, heavy flywheel, to keep the device running as steadily as possible, a long line to the end of which is connected a propeller, this propeller turns and registers the speed on the dial through the line that it is attached to.

In submerging a submarine goes down and forward. Water is admitted to ballast tanks to overcome the buoyancy of the vessel, while forward diving planes or hydroplanes are fitted, these are operated by electricity. As the buoyancy is overcome, these planes which are horizontal rudders, are set to steer the ship downward a little, so she will sink by loss of buoyancy and go under by the forward motion being steered downward by the diving planes or hydroplanes.

If there should be a breakdown of machinery on a submarine, causing stoppage of all machinery, the water in the ballast tanks could be blown out by an emergency air storage of about 3,000 pounds to the square inch. This would cause the vessel to come to the top. This is providing that the hull was not pierced. If the hull was pierced, the inrush of water might prevent the proper connections for the above being reached, or if any quantity of salt water reached the storage batteries, chlorine gas would be released. This would probably overcome the crew, if the doors to the battery room could not be closed quickly enough. In these cases the vessel would of course sink.—Lieut. Greene, in Adventure Magazine for June.

PUNITIVE MEASURES

By F. R. BUCKLEY.

Tarring and feathering, as an unofficial punishment for crime, is popularly supposed in the United States, as well as in the rest of the world, to be an American invention, dating from the frontier days of the West. There are, however, documents extant which prove that this mode of torment was prescribed by law, in England, as early as the year 1199; and there is internal evidence that the method was invented by, or for, Richard I, Coeur de Lion, in whose regulations for the preservation of order in the fleet, it appears as the punishment for a thief on shipboard. The culprit was to be shaven and shorn, boiling pitch poured on his head, and feathers shaken thereupon, "as a marke whereby he may be knawen;" and in addition, he was to be put ashore on the first land at which the ship touched.

This was the mildest corrective detailed by the regulations. Any sailor who drew blood from another by a willful blow, or who struck at a companion with any weapon, was to lose his right hand. Any murderer, at sea, was to be lashed to the body of his victim and thrown overboard; and any one who slew a comrade in a drunken brawl ashore was to be tied face to face with the dead man and buried alive.

It is rather interesting, in the history of the seventeenth century, when the aristocracy had a complete monopoly of the higher military and naval offices, to come across a British vice admiral, whose rise to fame started with a tub of pickles. His name was John Benbow; he was the son of a colonel who had fought Cromwell, and who literally died of joy when Charles II spoke to him kindly. And the pickles in the case were pirates' heads—thirteen of them, preserved in brine.

Young Benbow, commanding a merchant ship in 1686, had collected these amusing relics from the crew of a Sallee corsair, which had had the bad taste to attack him while he was about his lawful occasions in the Mediterranean. Going ashore a month later, he was followed by his boatswain, who carried the trophies in a sack; which sack Benbow refused to open for the satisfaction of the customs officers. They carried him before a magistrate, whose authority Benbow respected to the extent of ordering his boatswain to empty the sack on the floor of the courtroom.

In due course, this whimsicality was reported to Madrid, and Charles II of Spain, having ordered Benbow before himself, and dismissed him with a handsome present—wrote to James II of England, who insisted on presenting the pickle-maker with a captain's commission in the royal navy.—From Adventure Magazine for June.

Indian Village for New York.

An Indian garden and village soon will be erected in the Bronx, New York, as part of the Museum of the American Indian, says Popular Science Monthly. The first wing to be built will contain a museum of Indian relics. When the whole building is completed, the open patio in the center will be occupied by a botanical garden of plants used by North American Indians as food and as medicine. Full-sized models of Indian dwellings also will be constructed to give a realistic idea of Indian home life.

The Matter With Teaching

By AGNES LOVENDAHL SEWART.

The little town in which I first taught was in a panic of fear during the influenza epidemic. Many were sick and dying. Schools were closed. There were only three professional nurses—but every teacher volunteered.

When I left my room my landlady said: "Remember, if you get it you can't come back here."

Two teachers who were stricken in their service were taken to the pesthouse, where the only attention they received was the daily visit of the sheriff to make the fire in the lonely, snow-banked hut and bring them food and medicine.

We were all hundreds of miles from home, among strangers. Yet through fatigue and illness we served until school reconvened in December.

The school board refused to pay our salaries during the period school had been closed, in spite of our freely given service to the community. One member blandly told us we were too well paid anyway—he could remember when teachers were grateful for a sack of flour as wages!

His daughter had not volunteered as a nurse. Town girls had cowered at home in fright. We teachers were expected, as a matter of course, to meet the emergency. Were we not public servants?

The rural teacher is regarded as a necessary nuisance. Prosperous farmers' wives can not be bothered with her in their homes. When I finally secured a room, it was the stipulation that I must not wash or press anything, cook or eat in the house, or receive company. I had to eat at a smelly Japanese restaurant with section hands, mostly foreigners, and other transients.

Another year I had to study in the same room with a family of ten. I could choose bathing in a washtub before the kitchen fire or carrying water upstairs to the below-zero bath of splotchy zinc.

The rural teacher's clothes, friends, actions and even her telephone conversations and mail are closely observed and freely criticized. She is expected to attend the popular church, have no views on anything debatable, be an example of all things, and stand ready to serve as entertainer, refreshment committee, decorator, speaker, seamstress, stagehand or musician at any local celebration.—From the Delineator for July.

How to Honor the Flag

Never let the flag touch the ground.

Never leave it up after sunset or hoist it before sunrise.

When flags are massed together, the Stars and Stripes should precede the others or be carried in the center above them on a higher staff.

When the flag passes in a parade, or is being hoisted or lowered, all men not in uniform salute it by taking off the hat and holding it at the left shoulder. Women salute by placing the right hand over the heart.

Where displayed with another flag, the National Flag should be placed to the right of the other.

On shore the flag should never be dipped by way of salute or compliment to any one or anything.

The Church Pennant is the only flag ever flown from the same staff or above the United States flag, and then only in the navy during divine service.

The flag of the United States may be flown from your house on all patriotic occasions, but especially on the following days:

Washington's birthday, Lincoln's birthday, Mother's day, Memorial day, Flag day (June 14), The Fourth of July, Labor day, Armistice day.

Never fly the flag upside down (with the union reversed) except in case of dire distress at sea. In this case it must be answered immediately.

Remember that the flag represents a living country and should be treated as if it were [illegible] thing.—From Everybody's Magazine for July.

The Married Life of Helen and Warren

By Mabel Herbert Urner

Creator of the "Helen and Warren" Characters.

WARREN'S WELL-DIRECTED KICK DISRUPTS A DECOROUS OCCULT EVENING

"I'M sorry Mme. Duret is so late," apologized Mrs. Stevens. "It's after nine! I do hope nothing has happened."

"No such luck," muttered Warren under his breath.

"Sh—sh, dear," nudged Helen. "Now, please don't make any horrid remarks."

"Then why ring me in? If I'd known it was another spook party—you couldn't drag me here with a derrick."

"Well, if the spirits don't put up a good show—we'll exit," laughed Mr. Stevens, good-naturedly tolerant of his wife's interest in every new cult or "ism."

Mme. Duret, dark, stout, about 40, was ushered in.

"My taxi—your crowded streets! It took so long," in a foreign accent.

"Mme Duret is from Paris. She's been in New York only a few weeks," explained Mrs. Stevens. "Now, Madame, where would you like to sit? Will this chair be comfortable?"

"Ah, not so big. Not such high arms. Yes, that is better. Now, a table—and a cloth. A large cloth—to come to the floor."

A card table proved acceptable. But Madame rejected several covers until finally a satin bedspread was produced.

From her satchel, Madame now took a bell and a tambourine.

"Pass these around, please. You all see—no wires. Nothing attached."

The tambourine and small black-handled bell were gravely inspected.

"Now we will put them here. So!"

Raising the spread, she placed them under the table.

"Now, only two sitters at a time. Mrs. Stevens in the first sitting, please. The spirits come quickly to one who is responsive. Thank you. Now a gentleman."

* * * *

"Tough pickings," grinned Warren. "Drake's the only one with a kindly mug."

"You're right, he's elected," chuckled Mr. Stevens.

"No whispering over there," reproved his wife.

"Now, you all see? My hands and feet securely held."

At a satisfied murmur from the group, Madame requested the spread be lowered.

"Now, whatever happens, do not release my hands and feet. When the spirits come, they will ring the bell or tambourine. Then you may ask your questions. Now we will have it dark, please."

Mr. Stevens obligingly turned off the silk-shaded lights.

"Yes, all of them. Thank you. One of my controls is a little girl, Pansy. She is very playful. You must not be frightened if she pinches your ankles. My other control is White Wing, an Indian boy. I never know which will come."

A long pulsing silence in the now darkened room.

Suddenly a faint ting-a-ling. The bell!

Then a metallic jangle. The tambourine! A spirit! Proclaiming its presence!

IN the dim light from the hall, the medium was faintly outlined. Her head hanging forward—an attitude of utter exhaustion.

"Pansy? Yes—it—is—Pansy," she labored. "Now—the—questions——"

"Should mother make that trip to Oregon?" came Mrs. Stevens' awed voice.

Three knocks. In spirit parlance, "Yes." Weird, muffled knocks that seemed to come from nowhere. Even in the shadowy light they could all see her hands, still securely held.

"Had I better sell those C. & Q. bonds?" was Mr. Drake's query.

One knock. "No!"

Two more questions each, adequately answered, and the first sitting was over. The medium threw back her head, freed her hands, and called for the lights.

"Oh, her fingers—I felt them!" Mrs. Stevens clasped a gray silk ankle. "Just as plain—right here!"

"Yes, Pansy, Pansy is very playful," the medium recovering theatrically from the strain of the spirit control.

"And she pulled my skirt! I felt it!" tremulously excited. "When she pinched my ankle—I could even feel her nails. Oh, Mme. Duret, that was a marvelous materialization!"

"You are so very psychic," unctuously. "That is why the sitting was so successful. Now for the next. Would that skeptical gentleman like to sit in?" to Warren, whom she had been covertly watching.

"No, you don't want me in on that," he grinned.

But Mrs. Stevens insisted.

"Mr. Curtis is always so skeptical, Madame. You must convert him."

Again ceremonious preparations—as in the previous sitting.

Their hands and feet holding the medium. The lights again turned off.

The same throbbing silence.

Then the bell! The tambourine!

"Your—question?" panted the medium.

Another spirit pinch made Helen forget the questions so carefully framed. But at Warren's prompting cough, she managed a flustered.

"Should I—should we buy that summer cottage at Beachwood?"

No answering knock.

Then Warren's explosive,

"I think the spirits have gone on a strike. Turn on the lights!"

"No, no!" she shrieked. A blood-curdling shriek.

"Switch 'em on, Stevens! Quick!"

"Caught with the goods!" snorted Warren. "Now, Mrs. Stevens, there's one of your fakers shown up. Shakes the bell and tambourine with her toes! Neat little trick. Sneaks her foot out—we're only holding down her shoe."

Mme. Duret, spluttering with rage, now jumped up, overturning the table.

"Huh, must be a star year for suckers—to get away with that stunt! We ought to report you to the police. Here's your shoe. Thick all right—built for the job."

As Warren flung it to the floor—a faint "spirit" rap.

"The raps too, eh?" again he snatched it up. "Forgot 'bout those. Yes, here we are!"

Pressing the inside of the heel, he produced the same weird knockings.

"Hollow heel—knocker inside. All she does is press it. That's a whiskered one."

Hissing maledictions. Madame thrust her bulbous, half-nude foot into the shoe Warren finally surrendered.

"Now, you get out—or I'll put you out!" Mr. Stevens stepped menacingly forward. "That's all right, Emily, you stay where you are. I'll handle this."

A cyclonic, vituperative exit.

* * * *

WARREN was besieged with questions. "How did you do it?" "How did you know?" "Did you feel her draw her foot out?"

"No, she's too smooth for that. But I'd a hunch that was the trick. While she wiggled the tambourine with her toes—I kicked her shoe from under the table. Got the jolt of her life—when she went out to put back her hoof."

"I knew something was wrong," fluttered Helen. "I felt her hand twitch——"

"That's when she was toe-ing around—tryin' to locate the number nine. Then pulled the hysterics when I called for the lights. Seemed a little peeved."

"Yes, she was pretty raw, Emily," denounced Mr. Stevens. "I never interfere with your fakers—but you ought to pick 'em better'n that."

"Or not invite me to your spook shows," grinned Warren. "Hello, forgot her bell. Light one," jingling it. "Didn't take much toe work for this. But she took a nip out of my leg, all right. Pretty sharp nails. Pansy needs a manicure."

"And I paid $20 in advance," bewailed Mrs. Stevens.

"Guess I won't sell my C. & Q. bonds," winked Mr. Drake.

"Not on Pansy's tip," advised Warren. "How 'bout the toe work? Did she take a pinch at you?"

"No, just a tug at my trousers. I knew it was a phoney act—but couldn't see just how it worked. You pulled it off in great shape, Curtis. Shoving out that shoe was an inspiration."

"Gave it a good lusty kick—while she was shimmying that fool tambourine. Like to've seen her mug when she couldn't nail it!"

"She gave a wonderful seance at Mrs. Lindsey's—that's why I engaged her," apologized Mrs. Stevens. "If I'd known——"

"Oh, we loved it! We've had a gorgeous time," Mrs. Drake reassured her. "We can't often sit in on an expose. When I saw her bare toes——"

"Yes, showed up her piggy-wiggies," chuckled Warren. "Bunions and all. Fee in advance, eh? Not such a slow business. Next time we go broke—just limber up our toes, cut the toes off our socks, hook up with Pansy—and stage a few seances at 20 bucks per!"

CLOSE TO GRIM REAPER

One of the closest calls with the Grim Reaper that I ever had was while employed in the Baldwin Locomotive Works in Philadelphia. My work was mostly on the inside of the engines when they were nearly finished. On this particular day we had an engine which had to be finished before the close of the day. Everybody was doing their very best and, as is often the case, some very important things were forgotten.

One of them was to hang a sign on the outside to tell everybody that there was a man working on the inside. This proved to be very nearly fatal to me. They closed the fire door and started to test the boiler to see if there were any small defects in it. I happened to be in the boiler when they closed the door. The awful noise that is always made in that shop kept the men from hearing my cries for help.

They kept running the hot steam into the boiler and I kept hollering and pounding against the inside with my hammer until I nearly went mad. I could see some men walking around the engine, but could not attract their attention. It finally got so hot in there that I took off nearly all my clothes and tried to climb out of the drop pan at the bottom, but this hole was only 6 inches wide and 18 inches long, so I got stuck in there and was just about to give up hope (as they were running steam in as fast as possible). The heat was so intense that I thought I just couldn't endure it another second.

But luck or fate was with me, for just at that second a fellow passed close to where I was fastened and I threw my hammer and hit him on the ankle. He looked around, saw me waving my arms, and was horrified to realize that I was a prisoner. It only took him a few seconds to turn off the steam (I thought it took an hour) and open the door to get me out. Believe me, not for a million dollars would I go through it again.—By L. E. K., in Everybody's Magazine for July.

TAKING CARE OF BABIES

By DR. GEORGE K. PRATT.

Begin training your babies in sound habit formation early. Many desirable habits can be established during the first three months of life.

Healthy babies do not require a 2-o'clock-in-the-morning feeding. Start at three or four weeks to deprive him of this feeding.

Children should have an afternoon sleep period until well into their sixth year.

Establish the habit of early and regular bedtime.

Discourage baby's habit of depending on his bottle. Substitute for it as soon as advisable the habit of feeding himself with appropriate solid food.

If your child develops the habit of being fussy and overparticular about his food, try to replace it with the habit of eating whatever is set before him.

Don't neglect training in habits of bodily elimination. Regularity of bowel and bladder emptying can be taught early, and benefits both mother and child.

Last of all, remember that weeks and months are usually necessary to instill any of these habits. The secret lies in keeping at it until success is indicated. Other mothers are doing it every day—why not you?—From the Designer Magazine for July.

AMBITION WELL WON.

There was much discussion in an English city recently as to whether the public houses should be allowed to remain open until 11 o'clock instead of 10:30. One of the town counselors emphatically opposed the proposed change.

"Wot I say is," he announced in the council chamber, "that if a man ain't drunk by 'alf-past ten, he ain't trying."—From Everybody's Magazine for July.

TALES OF REAL DOGS By Albert Payson Terhune

HERO; SAVER OF NINETY-TWO LIVES.

SHE was a fisherman's dog, and though she was a female her master had named her "Hero." He could have searched every dictionary in the world without finding a more appropriate name for her.

She was a big Newfoundland, a member of a magnificent breed that should never have been allowed to lose its former popularity.

Here is the story of her great exploit in life-saving:

The mail steamship "Ethie" was on the way from Battle Harbor in Canadian Labrador to the western coast of Newfoundland. On the evening of December 9, 1919, the barometer gave warning of storm. The captain headed for Bonnie Bay harbor, some 20 miles distant, there to seek anchorage until better weather.

Long before he could reach this haven the storm broke, in spectacular fury, with a hurricane of snow. The thermometer registered four degrees below zero. The vessel fought in vain for sixteen hours to weather the tempest. The hatches were stove in, the coal bunkers flooded and the engine put out of commission.

Then the "Ethie" grounded on a shoal off Martin's Point, where the waves began to pound her to pieces. The lifeboats could not be launched. Some of the passengers were sent to the bridge and others up into the rigging. The crew worked desperately, but to no avail.

A group of fishermen collected on the rocky point 200 yards away, but could not get a boat to the stricken ship. The "Ethie's" captain tried again and again to send a line ashore by tying it to a life preserver in the hope that the wind would carry it to the rocks.

But the line was so heavy that the life-preserver would travel only half the distance. There it bobbed aimlessly in the billows. There seemed no possible way of getting it ashore.

Then it was that a fisherman called up his great Newfoundland dog, Hero, and told her to swim out and get hold of the line and tow it ashore. Hero understood. Also she understood the terrific peril of what she was about to do. She did not flinch, but plunged eagerly into the water.

Before she had swum twenty strokes a giant wave snatched her up, as if she had been a feather and hurled her against the rocky ledge of the shore. The fearful crash against the rocks stunned her. Her owner thought she was dead.

Presently, she came to her senses and staggered dizzily to her feet. Instantly she reeled forward again into the stormy sea. Fighting with superhuman energy and with all her splendid will-power, she struggled toward the line.

Once more the waves smashed her against the rocks, bruising and cutting her and knocking the breath out of her lungs.

Again and again she plunged back into the water, only to be driven upon the jagged rocks. Her strength was almost gone, but her hero spirit blazed as fearlessly as ever.

Then by some miracle she managed to beat her way through the hammering waves, and she reached the line. Catching it in her teeth, she swam ashore to where the fishermen were waiting, waist-deep in the surf, to take it from her exhausted jaws.

It was a simple matter to attach a heavier line and to secure one end of it to a jut of the cliff, while the crew rigged a boatswain's chair in which the passengers and then themselves could be drawn ashore.

All human force and ingenuity had failed to rescue the frozen and seemingly doomed occupants of the ship. The valor and strength and brain of a dog had succeeded where men had failed.

As a result, ninety-two lives were saved. The first passenger to be sent ashore was a tiny baby, wrapped snugly in a mailsack. Next came the other children and the women.

It was slow work, landing them one at a time, but at the end of nine hours all on board had been saved. Nearly every one except the baby had a hand or foot or some other part of the body badly frozen. But, thanks to Hero, they were all of them alive. To her and her alone they owed their lives.

Soon after the rescue, Hero was bought from her fisherman owner by Dennis Kane, of Wrangall, Alaska, who gave her an honored home for the rest of her life. Her photograph is on my desk, the likeness of a gloriously handsome dog with the expression of eye which tells of her gallant spirit.

Around her neck, in the photograph, is strung a medal, bearing the figures "92," representing the number of lives she saved on the "Ethie" that December day in 1919. The medal is in the shape of a keystone.

Besides this decoration, a medal and silver collar were sent to Hero by the Starry Cross of Philadelphia and another medal by the Nova Scotia S. P. C. A. and a silver maltese cross by a group of returned Canadian soldiers.

It is to be doubted that all this glittering stuff had any meaning at all to the grand dog. Assuredly it meant less to her than the rough pat of her master's hand on her head and his voice applauding her great deed with a "Good work, old girl."

Consider a Feather.

When any one says to me that he finds little that is marvelous in nature, I long for a feather. Not to tickle his nose, but to tickle into action his sense of proportion, to the end that he may have a true understanding of the word marvelous. Consider a feather. To be specific, consider one of the flight feathers from the wing of a common pigeon. I hear you say, "What of it? It is simple enough, just a quill and vane."

But is it so simple? Even the most careless eye can see that actually it is composed of feathers within feathers. There are two rows of what are called barbs, springing from that horny center quill. Each of these barbs is like a tiny feather itself, having in turn two rows of what are called barbules. These in turn have a series of curved hooks which are termed barbicles. These, according to Dr. Beebe, work into opposite series of grooves so tightly that the air can not force its way through the feather. He has delightfully calculated that a wing feather about six inches long has about 600 barbs on either side, or a total of 1,200 of these little side featherlets. Under the microscope no less than 275 pairs of barbules will be found on one of these featherlets. This gives a total of 990,000 separate barbules on this one feather. Then add the finer hooklets, or barbicles, and the marvel of that feather becomes apparent.

Like the hair of a mammal and the scale of a fish, the feather is a growth from the skin. When the feather first appears above the skin it is tightly rolled and bound up in a sort of sheath. Note the pin feathers on a chicken. But with most birds this sheath opens up almost at once, or at least in a very short time, and the feather flattens out into its normal shape. But there are some birds, notably the cuckoo and the kingfisher among our more common birds, on whom the feathers remain rolled in the sheath until the young birds are nearly grown. They are rather curious looking and no magician has ever produced a more remarkable change than may occur within just a few hours. The sheaths split, the feathers unroll, and the birds are in practically full plumage. In the accompanying illustration of little kingfishers note the feathers on the tops of the heads. Some of these have begun to unroll. So, I say as at the beginning—consider a feather.

Be Humane to Jimmy Skunk.

All along I have contended that Jimmy Skunk is naturally a gentleman and, treated as a gentleman, will in turn be true to form. "But how," writes a puzzled contributor, "can we be polite to him when it is necessary to catch him in a trap that he may be removed where his presence will not be an intrusion? A steel trap is not exactly a gentlemanly implement of detention."

A steel trap is distinctly brutal. If Jimmy Skunk, caught in one of these abominations, does not carry his resentment to the utmost extreme, he is more of a gentleman than any one has a right to ask. Here is a method for catching him without hurting either Jimmy's feelings or spoiling the surrounding atmosphere. It is contributed by Mrs. Rosa G. Squier, who says that it is the way her father used to do it.

"Fasten a piece of meat to the bottom of a light barrel, such as a flour barrel. Place the barrel on its side with the open end resting on the ground and supported near its middle by a stick of wood as a fulcrum. The barrel should be so nicely balanced that the weight of the skunk ascending the side of the barrel to reach the bait will cause the barrel to tip up and take a perpendicular position as soon as the animal passes the fulcrum. A little testing with the hands will show the unstable position. When Jimmy finds himself trapped in the barrel he will make no fuss about it, but will possess himself in patience. The barrel may be safely picked up and carried to any point where it is desired to release Jimmy. Just put the barrel on its side and Jimmy will do the rest and be perfectly polite about it. In this way my father removed skunks from cellars and woodsheds, and many years ago trapped them for their furs. It inflicts no suffering on Jimmy and there is no danger to your own or your neighbors' pets. Should a cat be lured in by the smell of the meat, she can easily scramble or jump out. Steel traps are wicked things at best. They are barbaric."

I have never seen the barrel trap tried, but see no reason why it should not work. A box trap with a figure 4 arrangement is quite as effective and quite as odorless.

More Odd Pets.

Recently in these columns I told of a pet lobster. I still think this holds first place among queer pets. But here is a story which I think may claim second place:

"Did you ever have a pet bat, or ever hear of a bat being made a pet of?" inquires Mrs. G. L. Giles, and then follows with this story:

"When I was a young girl my brother brought home a bat which he had found in a playmate's cellar. As I recall it, it was about the size and color of a full-grown mouse and appeared to be only partly awake. I put it in a small wooden bird cage. In a short time it became quite lively and, thinking it must be hungry, I offered it a fly. This was taken from my fingers between the bars of the cage.

"So every night my brother and I would catch flies and sometimes by way of a variety a cockroach for the bat's supper. After a while I became venturesome and, opening the cage door would call 'Batty, Batty, Batty.' He would come out of the cage and toward me for the fly I held between my fingers. Each night I got a little farther away from the cage, until I was 15 feet away from him. At the sound of his name he would twitch his ears and turn his head and fly straight toward me to take from my hand whatever I had to offer him. In flying across the room he did not rise more than about two feet. All summer and fall we fed and cared for this little fellow and when in the winter he fell a victim of an unusually severe cold spell we mourned the loss of an unusual pet."

This happens to be the first time I have known of a bat being made a pet of and taught to come at call, but I see no reason why it should not be done. Speaking of queer pets, a friend of mine one time had a porcupine. Offhand, I should say that Prickly Porky is about the last animal I would think of as a pet to be smoothed and stroked and made much of. But it can be done. Never once did Dinty, as he was called, raise his quills. He loved to be petted and would tease to be stroked, but all the time he was a perfect gentleman about it and never once forgot that he was armed. Instead of being stupid, as is the usual rating of a porcupine, he showed a considerable degree of intelligence.

The Rain Caller.

The common tree-toad—not a toad at all, but a true frog—has left the smiling pool and is at home in the tree of his choice. He may remain there but a day or two, or he may remain there most of the summer. It all depends upon the restaurant facilities of his green inn. If the food is plentiful and tasty he is likely to remain. You are likely to hear him any day now calling for rain. At least, that is what he is reputed to be doing. As a matter of fact, he is merely expressing his satisfaction in finding a trace of dampness in the air. Like all frogs and toads, he must have a moist skin, and that same skin is extremely sensitive. So he is apt to feel moisture in the air before others detect it. Naturally, the approach of a storm brings with it the stimulus to raise his voice in thanksgiving. But it isn't to be depended on. Moisture, which does not necessarily mean rain, will start him going just the same. Like most weather prophets, he has built his reputation on the few times when rain has followed, while the many times he has failed to prophesy correctly are forgotten.

Naturalist's Question Box.

That depends. Where the grackles are not too numerous, they, like the crows, probably do more good than harm. Unfortunately, the purple grackle has a propensity for breaking up the nests of smaller birds and sometimes will systematically go through an orchard looking for them. Both the eggs and fledglings are taken. When one witnesses a raid of this kind, one is tempted to turn thumbs down. However, this is for a limited period only.

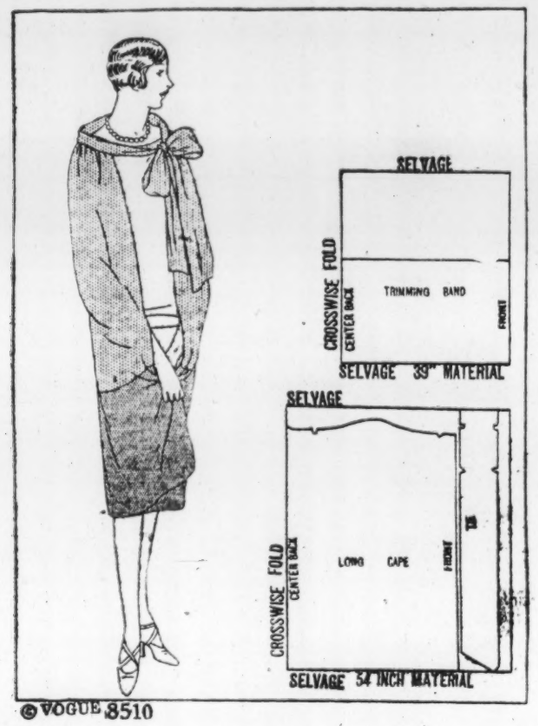

Mrs. Sarah Plumm writes that she was one time picking berries in the mountains of New Hampshire when she heard a noise, and turning, discovered a black bear also picking berries. "I did not run, for I wanted my share," says she. "If I had run, would he have chased me?"

It is not likely, Mrs. Plumm. He probably would have taken to his heels in the opposite direction. My compliments to you for remaining to get your share of berries under the circumstances.

The native home of the silver fox is the native home of the red fox, for the silver fox is but a color phase of the red fox. I believe it is more frequently found in the northern range of the red fox than in the southern range; but it is not a distinct species. That is why there are all sorts of variations through what is known as the cross-fox to the exquisite silver fox.

SEWING MADE EASY—THE SIMPLEST EVENING CAPE.

Here's an evening cape that anybody could wear, and anybody—not utterly lazy and totally dumb—could make it easily. The one in the sketch is in turquoise-blue velvet and taffeta, very attractive indeed for eighteen-year-old Elsie, who wears it over a dress to match, trimmed in silver to go with her slippers.

All you do is cut out one big straight piece of taffeta—as you see in the detail sketch—with another straight piece for the tie. Gather the top of the cape to the tie, right sides together, turn over and hem. If you aren't going to line the wrap—and you needn't, though you might use chiffon—hem the front and the lower edges and finish the seams with binding to match. Or they might be pinked. You'll need two yards and a half for the medium size in 54-inch taffeta, with a yard and a quarter of 39-inch velvet, cut lengthwise, for the trimming band. The cape may be made full length without the trimming band.

THE CONVERSATIONS OF CLARIBEL.

Dear Eve: I do wish I could color all these sketches for you, because, really, the color's the most interesting part of them. The ground-color and the way the accessories are worked out. It's all so different from the way we would have done it last year.

The woman at the left has a black taffeta coat with a big white flower on it worn over a black-and-white pleated taffeta skirt. If she'd done that last year—only she wouldn't have, because taffeta wasn't in—she'd have had a black hat. This year her hat is grey, and just the size I'm told Paris thinks of as a "big hat," though, heaven knows, it looks a modest mushroom compared to the huge things that we see here. The lady's stockings and gloves are grey, too, but her shoes were black dull kid and the band on her hat was black. This revival of black kid is awfully interesting.

In the middle, you'll see a beige foulard printed in navy, with engaging little bows. Here's where the big hat comes to its true American proportions—natural color, with a wide band of beige and a narrow one of blue. Beige shoes and stockings.

The woman at the right looks like the goddess of the beet field, for she's all in red—gorgeous, deep, true red—crepella, I think. It has six sets of pleats for its only trimming, except that the belt comes up and plays it's a band in back. Her hat was beige straw with a red band, and she wore beige shoes and stockings.

Everybody says red's going to be very good for this autumn, but I tremble to think what it'll look like when the cheap copyists get hold of it. They'll trim it with something—or get purple into the red—or, if they don't, fat ladies will wear it and carry bead bags! Me, I have my red dress already and will wear it out before the deluge—yes, the one I sketched.

As ever,
CLARIBEL.

RIGHT AND WRONG FOR HOT-WEATHER TRAVELING.

"My dear, oh my dear—look at the poor thing! Doesn't she look like an ice cream soda gone wrong? She's one of those terrible old kittens, isn't she just?"

And then—horror of horrors—she turned out to be an aunt of this very girl to whom Mary was talking. But the situation was saved, because the girl's mother joined the group—and she was perfectly lovely.

Auntie—who insisted that her nieces call her Genevieve—was traveling in that most impractical of all colors, pale grey. A ruffly grey taffeta frock—fancy taffeta squashing in a train!—a large blue horsehair hat, pale blue, with velvet binding—a blue cape with a grey feather collar—patent leather shoes, ever so much too fussy, with fly-away little grey bows—a grey silk bag, embroidered in blue beads, just quite too ghastly—and grey gloves of glace kid, when glace kid hasn't been worn for ages, with trimmings of blue which should never have been born!

But mother—thank heaven—was cool, smart and comfortable in a straight coat of myrtle-green canton crepe over a simple two-piece printed dress in green, black and white. Her one-strap shoes of brown calf matched her brown leather bag. Her gloves and her stockings were beige. And her hat matched her coat. No wonder mother married and auntie didn't. Poor auntie! But she still hopes bravely on.

"The Avenue" in the Fifties and Sixties

By CHARLES NOBLE.

THE final passage of the bill providing for the expenditure of $50,000,000 during the next five years for public buildings in Washington, nearly all of which are to be placed south of Pennsylvania avenue, sets one to building castles in the air: Stately marble palaces for the nation's business along the whole line of the south side of the street in place of the comparatively poor and shabby stores which now fill the space; private enterprise responding to the challenge of public wisdom and courage, with a corresponding row of hotels, office buildings and stores facing them on the north side; "the Avenue," the passage from the Capitol to the White House, completed in accordance with the original artistic plan for the nation's Capital City.

By contrast with this picture of the imagination, I am reminded of what I found, while browsing among the books in the Library of Congress some time ago in a volume called "A Picture of Washington," prepared by W. Q. Force as a guide to visitors in the early years of the nineteenth century. In his introductory chapter Mr. Force writes: "It is a historical fact that even as far back as 1663, more than a century before the revolutionary war, the site of the city of Washington was laid out and called Rome. A gentleman by the name of Pope was the proprietor of the soil, and the Tiber ran through his tract." Mr. Force does not give any documentary evidence for the truth of this statement, but he goes on to remark: "The stream still flows at the foot of the Capitol Hill, and has its ancient name of fame." It was still flowing at the same place, though hidden by the arches which supported the cobble pavement of the Avenue, in the fifties of the last century. Excavation would doubtless show that it still flows where Second street comes to the Avenue, though the "famous name of fame" is forgotten and the stream confined to the humble task of assisting the sewer system of the city.

In the same introductory chapter of his guide book Mr. Force quotes from a letter written in the year 1800 by Mr. John Cotton Smith, who came to Washington in that year as a representative in Congress from the State of Connecticut. Mr. Smith wrote as follows: "Our approach to the city was accompanied with sensations not easily described. One wing of the Capitol only had been erected, which, with the President's house a mile distant from it, both constructed of white sandstone, were shining objects in dismal contrast with the scene around them. Instead of recognizing the avenues and streets portrayed in the plan of the city, not one was visible, unless we except a road with two buildings on each side of it called New Jersey avenue. The Pennsylvania avenue, leading as laid down on paper from the Capitol to the presidential mansion, was then nearly the whole distance a deep morass covered with alder bushes, which were cut through the width of the intended avenue the ensuing winter. Between the President's house and Georgetown a block of houses had been erected which then bore and may still bear the name of "The Six Buildings." There were also two other blocks consisting of two or three dwelling houses, in different directions, and now and then an insulated wooden habitation; the intervening spaces and, indeed, the surface of the city generally being covered with shrub oak bushes on the higher grounds, and on the marshy soil either trees or some sort of shrubbery."

In the memory picture of my childhood, from 1850 to 1862, the Capitol has the two wings, north and south, for the Senate and the House of Representatives; but the old dome in the center had disappeared, and in its place were the skeleton beams for the new dome, to be, in my matured opinion, the most beautiful structure of its type in the world, and which ought to put the architect, Walter, in the same niche of artistic fame with Brunelleschi, Michelangelo and Sir Christopher Wren.

Instead of the noble stone terraces which now adorn the western approach to the Capitol were steep grassy slopes; and the grounds were surrounded by high iron railings, with gate posts of a yellowish sandstone, which posts and railings have been scattered at various parts of the Mall, where they linger out a useless and unbeautiful existence. As one looked northward from the west front of the Capitol, those two lonely buildings on New Jersey avenue stood out distinctly; and there was a legend that one of them had once been the residence of one of the early Presidents.

WE boys sometimes quenched our thirst at a fountain about the center of the western boundary of the Capitol grounds, which still flows with water strongly impregnated with iron, water which we understood was piped from a chalybeate spring at Bladensburg. One of the more facetious of my playmates once answerd a complaint that the water was lukewarm with the remark: "Well, you would be warm, too, if you had run all the way from Bladensburg on a hot summer day." The Marine band used to give concerts in these western grounds of the Capitol once every week, and I vividly recall many a race from the bandstand to the gate, when the strains of "Yankee Doodle" announced the end of the entertainment.

There seemed to me nothing lacking in the dignity and beauty of these surroundings of the Capitol, and I remember being greatly surprised and shocked when a visiting relative suggested that the idea of surrounding a great public building with grass, trees and flowering shrubs was entirely mistaken and inappropriate. "Such a building," he went on to say, "should be open to the public view in all directions with nothing allowed to interrupt the impression it should make. The grass, trees and flowers were beautiful in themselves, but should be relegated to parks and gardens, and not confused with plazas and architectural monuments." I did not get the full force of the criticism at the time; but since those days, having seen the wonderful plaza of St. Peter's at Rome and the great historic palaces and cathedrals of the Old World, I have realized how much of their effect is due to the withdrawal of all that might interrupt the view. Try to imagine St. Mark's at Venice surrounded by a park with lofty trees instead of the stately open spaces and surrounding corridors of the great square. Then try to form a picture of the noble west front of the Capitol, the incongruous trees and shrubs cleared away from the view of the towering dome and the noble stone terraces, their place being taken by a great plaza paved with marble blocks, fountains playing, and colossal statues of Clay, Webster, Adams, Randolph, Douglass, Calhoun and other statesmen of House and Senate, whose oratory really determined great public policies in their times. Such would surely be a fitting introduction to the "Government avenue," which the street connecting the Capitol and the White House ought to be.

There was certainly little to suggest such dignity and beauty in the Pennsylvania avenue of my boyish days. From the Capitol gate to Third street was then as now the Botanic garden on the south side and undistinguished stores and lodging houses on the north; though probably these latter may have been more respectable than now, because not so old. At the corner of Third street stood the building of what was then known as the St. Charles hotel, with its really beautiful portico of columns of the rare Potomac marble, the material which gave such unique distinction to the old Senate and House chambers, now occupied by the Supreme Court and the statues of favorite sons of the different States. This small hotel was, in the early days, a rather favorite hostelry for government officials, but had fallen from that high estate.

Between Third and Four-and-a-half streets nothing remains in memory except the plain but suitable building then occupied by the Congressional Globe, which performed the function now carried on by the Congressional Record, printed at the government printing office, of making the official report of the proceedings of Congress. This building still stands, and the various cheap private structures in the rest of the block on both sides of the Avenue, have left no record in memory and seem to be unchanged in general character and lack of distinction.

The little street, two blocks long, from the Avenue to what we called the City hall, but now known as the District courthouse, has been given the dignified title of John Marshall place, suggested by the legal atmosphere of the courthouse and the neighboring law offices. In the old days it bore the singular name of Four-and-a-half, which still clings to its southern extension to the river shore, or to what we called the arsenal, which is now known as the War college. The strange lack of imagination, or shall I say the mental indolence of the authorities, has foisted upon the public this monstrosity of nomenclature in the case of a few other short streets coming between the regular numbers. In this particular instance there was a real difficulty arising from the placing of the City hall building in the block between Fourth and Fifth streets and the meeting at that point of the two short avenues, Louisiana and Indiana. This combination seems to have hindered the cutting through of the two streets from these avenues to the Mall, and it was desirable to have a street leading to the main front of the new building. Hence the decision to compromise between Fourth and Fifth with Four-and-a-half; a decision reflecting more credit on the mathematical ability than on the common sense of the city managers of the time.

THE Fendall office building at the corner of John Marshall place and Indiana avenue, has a special interest for old Washingtonians, as its site is that of the home of Mr. Fendall, one of the leading lawyers of the early days, and whose brilliant family of sons and daughters carried on the tradition of their father's distinction. His son Reginald succeeded to his father's prominent place in the Washington bar, and by his marriage to Miss Galt allied the family with another of the famous names in Washington business circles.

That neighborhood was referred to in the first installment of my "Memories of Washington" as one of the important residence districts in the '50s and '60s; and a study of the old houses still standing there and once occupied by prominent citizens would bring out a good deal of interesting material. I must, however, return now to the Avenue, stopping for a moment at the two churches; the old First Presbyterian, looking exactly as it did in my boyhood, but doomed, as I hear, to yield at last to the pressure of the westward movement, and the Metropolitan Methodist Episcopal at the corner of C street. This belongs really to a period just a little later, as it was built during Grant's administration, and is memorable for its association with him and later with McKinley and with Gen. and Mrs. Logan. In a recent interesting article on the history of this church I failed to find, or perhaps overlooked, any reference to its first pastor, Dr. Newman, who was always a special favorite with Gen. Grant, and whose unusual eloquence gave that famous pulpit a reputation well suited to the chimes, the first in Washington, which morning and evening called people to its services. In visiting that church not very long ago I was much interested in the memorial tablet dedicated to Mr. Andrew Duvall, whose name is evidently most honorably associated with the development and activities of that congregation. One of the boys in the Rittenhouse academy in my time was Andrew Duvall, and I wonder if all but I have reached the stage of memorial tablets. If there are any old pupils of Mr. Wight yet living in Washington who may see these words, I challenge them to join me in organizing an association of the boys of the famous old school, to meet and talk over old times, and at least in our minds and hearts to erect a memorial to the teachers who did so much for us.

Coming back to the Avenue, we are at once confronted with the building erected by the Colonization society in the day of its greatest importance, when the recognition of the new Republic of Liberia gave to the supporters of that enterprise some real encouragement to believe that they were promoting something that would open to the United States a way out from the embarrassments of their involvement in the slavery system. As things have turned out, the building might well be characterized in the words which Charles Dickens applied to the whole city in 1842, as "a monument to a deceased project."

The two blocks between Four-and-a-half and Seventh streets contained on the north side of the Avenue some of the most important private buildings of the city of that time. Some of these still stand, but have largely lost their relative distinction. Galt's jewelry store was here. The building stands unchanged, but given over to the uses of a cheap hotel or lodging house, since Galt yielded to the pressure of the westward urge, and moved his store to the block between Eleventh and Twelfth streets, though still inviting his customers to come to the Avenue. The old National hotel continues to invite its patrons to the corner of the Avenue and Sixth street, and Brown's Marble hotel with the more pretentious name of the Metropolitan, holds its position as one of the most stately buildings of the neighborhood.

It was the presence of the branch of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal which led to the placing of the Center market on its banks between Seventh and Ninth streets. It seems probable that the putting through of that canal may have helped materially in draining the marsh which Mr. Smith, in 1800, saw where the Avenue was expected to be. In my time boats could bring vegetables and fruits from Maryland and Virginia farms by means of this canal to the market; and a good share of its business was done by country people who offered all sorts of wares on the sidewalks around the market buildings; hot boiled hominy and horse cakes, laurel blossoms and mayflowers or trailing arbutus, as well as the usual market vegetables and fruits. It was sometimes my privilege to go with my mother on the market day, and the privilege was one not to be despised. There was always a colored lad waiting for the job of carrying the big market basket, and my part in the expedition was the easy one of enjoying the pleasant sights and smells and greeting my schoolmates some of whom would generally be there. Washington in those days was just a big overgrown village, and going to market was like the afternoon concerts of the Marine band, a favorite social occasion, where one would be likely to meet neighbors and friends, and a good part of the morning hour would be spent in pleasant gossip. People, of course, had their favorites among the dealers in the various stands. With us Mr. Hoover was the one to whom we generally went for meats, and we always got our butter and eggs from Mr. Oyster; generally planning to have our journey among the dealers end with one or the other of these merchants, whose children and grandchildren are still supplying the people of Washington with the same necessities.

THE intersection of C street with the Avenue between Seventh and Ninth, then as now, made a rather prominent location for retail business; but the one establishment which remains distinctly in memory, singularly enough for a normal boy, is Perry's dry-goods store at the corner of Ninth. The name suggests one of the vastly important changes in business methods from that day to this. There were no department stores in those days, but the various forms of business which fill the great establishments of the present day were strictly separated, and one would never dream of buying books or furniture or ready-made clothing at the same place with dress goods or jewelry. Perry's was, as I remember it, strictly a ladies' shopping place for silks, satins and other dress fabrics and all sorts of white goods, so called. The corner building, about one-third of the Parker-Bridget establishment, held the complete stock of Perry's store.

Ninth street had not then begun to rival Seventh as a business thoroughfare. The only buildings I recall there are the two churches, both in the near neighborhood of F street; the Methodist Protestant, whose building still stands, I think, but secularized in its use, and the Fourth Presbyterian, just north of the patent office between G and H. Dr. John C. Smith (no one ever dreamed of calling him Mr.) was for many years its pastor, and the few whose memories go back with mine to those days will surely recall his typical figure, typical of the old-fashioned Presbyterian clergyman. Tall, with sallow complexion, always with black frock coat, white cravat (not tie, but cravat) and high-pointed standing collars, clean shaven face when beards were generally worn, he could never have been mistaken for anything but just what he was. He was a strong preacher, and always a man of influence in the community. Rev. J. T. Kelly, associate pastor in Dr. Smith's last years, succeeded him in the pastorate, and led the congregation in its moving to the corner of Thirteenth and Fairmont streets, where he has completed the phenomenal pastorate of 50 years, and where he still remains in close relation with the church as pastor emeritus.

Memory fails to supply anything very definite as to the block from Ninth to Tenth street, beyond the impression that in general the buildings were of a fairly creditable character, and that here was the Metzerott musical establishment, which shared that business with Ellis, whose early location I can not recall, though I remember distinctly his later building in the block between Eleventh and Twelfth. I think it was somewhere in this part of the Avenue that James Y. Davis sold hats, but who was of special interest to me as the father of Sam Davis, one of the older boys in Mr. Wight's school in my time. The business was carried on after Mr. Davis' death under the name of J. Y. Davis' Sons, and on my occasional visits to Washington in later years I seldom failed to find Sam at his post of duty there, and always cordially willing to talk over old days at school. One of the disappointments of my return to Washington in 1920 was the failure to find this store and the consequent conviction that Sam, with so many other old friends, had gone to join the majority.

In Tenth street, north of the Avenue, was the Baptist church of which the Rev. Mr. Hill, son-in-law of the great banker, Corcoran, was the pastor. There was another Baptist church on Thirteenth street between G and H. Washington in those days was occasionally visited by severe thunder and lightning and wind storms, and I distinctly remember watching from a rear window of our home at Thirteenth and F the steeple of that church rocking in the wind of such a storm and finally crashing down through the roof to the utter destruction of the building. That catastrophe led to the union of the congregation with that of the Tenth street church, and that union led to the abandonment of the Tenth street building when the united congregations decided to build another and better house for their future services. The Tenth street building was then offered for sale; was purchased by a Baltimore theatrical manager named Ford, and under the name of Ford's theater, for a few years competed with the old National for the favor of the theater-going people of Washington. In this theater occurred the tragedy of the assassination of Abraham Lincoln. So the destruction of the old Thirteenth street church by the thunder gust that hot summer afternoon forged the first link in the chain of trivial events which provided the place for that terrible crime. It seems a strange combination of circumstances that Lincoln should have met his death in a building that had been a church, on the night of Good Friday, the day which so many Christians observe in commemoration of the supreme sacrifice of Christ on Calvary. To others there may seem a strange appropriateness in the circumstance, as a great example or illustration of the sentiment in Mrs. Julia Ward Howe's hymn. A slight change of the words, not inconsistent with the thought, would make them read: "As Christ died to make men holy, so He died to make men free."

IT was in the Kirkwood hotel, a modest brick building on the site where the Raleigh now stands at the corner of the Avenue and Twelfth street, that on that same night the unsuccessful attempt was made on the life of Vice President Johnson. On the opposite corner was a drug store whose old-fashioned jars of brilliantly colored water with the lamp light shining through made its windows a fascinating appeal to the public. Those were early days in the fashion of soda water drinking, and this particular store is memorable to me for having a set of boxes, after the manner of a postoffice, to assist the customer in carrying a charge account for the cooling beverage.

I suppose that Harvey's famous restaurant must have been at the corner of Eleventh street in those days, as it has been ever since; but I have no memory of ever entering its doors. It was at a much less pretentious place, farther west, that a facetious cousin, an army officer, challenged me to a contest in eating raw oysters. I think the matter must have been kept from the knowledge of my mother, and I know I ate far more than was good for me, and always felt that his victory of only one oyster, was due to the unfair advantage that he had a glass of beer with his while my teetotal principles limited me to water.

I used to look in at the door of Gautier's restaurant, or as it might be called today, ice cream parlor, like Thomas Moore's "Peri" at the gate of Paradise, never dreaming that by any possibility I could ever be a partaker of its splendid delights. I do not know of any present-day establishment that would be likely to arouse similar feelings in the boy of my age; which may be due to the difference in times and in boys rather than to any essential difference between such places in that day and this.

The old National theater also was, for the most part, out of the world of us boys, whether above or below, I am not sure, but certainly beyond. It would take an older, more sophisticated mind to recall worthwhile reminiscences of the famous old play house. What I had to say about Willard's also, was given from the point of view of the F street end rather than from that of the Avenue.

As one comes to the western end of the famous street (for the part between the White House and Georgetown is really quite another affair, and should have another name) one can not fail to notice that the end is not at the President's house, in accordance with the early plans, but at the Treasury. There is a legend to account for this, connected with the life and illustrative of the character of Old Hickory. The plans were made for the Treasury building while Jackson was President, and when the location of the proposed new building was under discussion, according to the legend, the President struck his cane upon the plan of the city, just east of the White House and said: "Put it there." It was not reported to me that he swore "By the eternal," but he was sufficiently emphatic to forbid remonstrance, and so there, plump in

Fresh from the Factory

By Eric Howard

In business it is the fellow who steps out in front that "brings home the bacon," as the saying is, and so Harry Westcott Blake tried the same plan in his love-making, and even seeming failure could not shake his faith, and so—well, he won, to be sure.

AT 8 o'clock on Monday morning Harry Westcott Blake burst into the office of Albertson & Co., factory representatives of the Dyer motorcar people.

There was really no need for Harry to enter like a comet, except that it was his way. He was perpetually bursting in or out of somewhere.

"Greetings!" he cried, despite the fact that there was no one to greet except a slender young woman at a desk far across the room. She looked up at his word and returned his salutation with a faint, somewhat amused smile.

At Albertson & Co.'s office the working day begins at 8:30, which accounted for the absence of others from this busy hive of commerce. Harry, as usual, was early; also, he was a bird; likewise, he was in search of worms.

He crossed the room to where the girl sat. She was busy with some correspondence. But his approach was comet-like enough to cause her to give up her work and look at him.

Harry's stride was masterful; to the observer it looked as if he were fighting his way through countless obstacles. He gave the impression of struggling against the air; unlike Don Quixote, he didn't need windmills to fight—he fought the wind. On the streets people got out of his way. He had the steps of a conqueror.

Also, he had good-humored eyes, in which the fire of determination could burn; a ready smile; and an air of self-confidence so overwhelming that it inspired respect in most people.

"You better get that trousseau together, Margaret," he told the girl, "because you're going to need it very soon."

"Why, Mr. Blake!" she protested. "I told you——"

"I know you did," agreed the man, "but you didn't really mean it. How could you? I love you, and I think—in fact, I'm sure—that you love me, though you're trying to hide it from me. And we're going to be married, Margaret, just as soon as I sell those 25 cars to Hammond of the stage line. That will be today!"

"But——" Margaret Hughes gave a breathless little gasp. "But I've known you for only a week! Why, I couldn't think of it! Why——"

"That's all right, darling. No need to think of it. Just get ready for the big event. I'll sell those 25 cars today—I've got an appointment with Hammond—and my commission will amount to —well, figure it out for yourself. That will give us a grand young start. And Albertson will raise my salary, and—— Get the trousseau ready!"

"But, Mr. Blake——"

"Call me Harry!"

But she didn't. She was really too breathless to call him anything. Her face, if not as red as a beet, was as rosy as a bright ripe apple. There was a hint, but only a hint, of anger in her dark eyes.

His attack had left her breathless, as it always did, but she quickly regained her womanly poise. She laughed, and for an instant the sting of her laughter caused Harry to look quite crestfallen. But only for an instant.

"You're very amusing!" said Margaret. "On the second day after we met you proposed to me. Isn't that absurd? And you've assumed that I will marry you. That is even more absurd. Yes, you are very amusing. And I am not flattered by your attentions. They argue too much experience of a kind."

"Oh, Margaret!" protested Harry, with a sad look. "You know that isn't so!"

"I don't!" she stubbornly replied. "And about Mr. Hammond, of the stage line, I wouldn't, if I were you, try to sell him the cars. Mr. Albertson wants to handle that matter himself. He would not welcome your interference."

"Ho!" laughed Harry, his confidence restored. "Hasn't he been trying for weeks? Didn't he tell the whole sales department, Saturday morning, that he'd give anything to land Hammond? He didn't ask me, personally, to go after him, but I'm going to do it just the same."

"You know that Mr. Albertson will not welcome your assistance," rejoined the girl. "And if you should fail, as you probably will, it will mean——"

"Fail?" cried Harry, as if he had never heard the word. "Fail? Well, what do you care if I do?"

"I—I don't!" Margaret was stubborn, but unconvincing.

"Yes, you do, darling," laughed Harry. "But I shan't! Not a chance! I'd better leave a memo for Albertson telling him that I'm going after Hammond. Will you take it?"

The girl nodded and Harry dictated a brief note.

"Good-by, darling," said Harry as he left. "Going to wish me luck?"

"Bad luck—and lots of it!" rejoined Margaret.

"Thanks, darling!" Harry stressed the latter word.

"Don't call me that!" she called after him.

She discovered, after he had gone, that her heart was beating at an alarming rate. Yet she was thrilled and happy. That feeling of happiness angered her, and she began to wonder about herself and Harry.

He had come, a week ago, from the Eastern factory, where the famous Dyer cars were made, and had joined the Albertson sales force. More than that, he had nearly upset it.

Mr. Albertson himself was quite a conservative, and his sales force echoed his own personality. The coming of Harry was somethink like the approach of a tornado. No one was left in doubt for an instant that he was a live wire of heavy voltage.

He knew Dyer cars. He had built them in the famous factory. Moreover, he knew that he knew them; and he knew how to tell others what he knew.

He had been held down, at Albertson's, by the red tape of the organization and by his employer's conservatism. And, during the week, when he had not been allowed to go after business—Albertson felt that he should first of all become familiar with their methods—he had been as restless as a racehorse held back at the starting time.

Now he was going after Hammond, without Albertson's knowledge or consent! Hammond, of the new stage line, was in the market for twenty-five cars. Albertson hoped that he would buy Dyers. But so far he had not been able to get a decision from Hammond. Restless and impatient, Harry had decided to take a day off and make the sale! That was like him, thought Margaret. Somebody should really take the wind out of his sails. He was altogether too confident; he was too fresh—fresh from the factory!

And yet she had not meant to wish him bad luck. After all, despite his audacity, his attentions to her were flattering. That is, many of the girls in the office would have been flattered. But she——

"Good morning, Mr. Albertson," she said as her employer entered. Because she was his secretary, she worked earlier and later than the other girls in the office. "Mr. Blake was in. He left this memo for you."

Mr. Albertson was a man in whom only golf had prevented obesity. Ordinarily he was calm and self-possessed, having a good digestion and a philosophic outlook on life.

But the memo from Harry came very near to producing an apoplectic stroke. Indeed, it seemed for a moment that Mr. Albertson would do a St. Vitus dance, or, at least, the Charleston.

His body shook, he trembled with rage, and he became almost incoherent. Margaret, being a competent secretary, understood him.

What he was trying to say was this: "The idiot! The insolent young idiot! The preposterous—— Of all the nerve! Did you tell him not to interfere? Did you tell him I wanted to deal with Hammond?" He turned to Margaret, since she was nearest him, to vent his wrath upon her.

"Yes, I told him," she answered.

"And that didn't matter!" exclaimed Albertson with a new surge of indignation. "Well, I'll be—— We've got to stop him! That's all there is to it! He's got to be stopped before he sees Hammond! He'll ruin everything. Why, I was going to fire him today—I saw Saturday that he could never fit in with our organization. Where did he go?"

Neither Margaret nor the memo supplied a specific answer to that question. He had gone to meet Hammond, but where?

"Phone Hammond's office," directed Albertson. "Phone his house. Phone everywhere! And send in Bates, Russell and Parsons—we've got to stop him! We've got to think of some way to stop him! The idiot!"

Margaret discovered that she was on the point of saying "He is not an idiot!" but she discovered it in time and didn't say it.

On her way to the telephone, as Albertson had directed, she found herself hoping that they wouldn't be able to stop him. Then she laughed.

"Stop him?" she said to herself. "You might as well try to stop a hurricane!"

Much can be done with a 2-cent stamp. It can be made to carry a message so vital and forceful that the most reluctant of men—Mr. Hammond, of the State Stage Lines, for example—are constrained to read and, having read, to act.

Harry had written Mr. Hammond such a message. He was, he stated truthfully, a factory man. He had helped to build Dyer cars. He knew them inside and out.

Would Mr. Hammond give him two hours for a complete demonstration? He promised the stage man that he would bore him with no sales talk. The car would sell itself, or it wouldn't sell.

Mr. Hammond, who had been harassed by loquacious salesmen, replied that he would meet Mr. Blake at his home at 9 o'clock Monday morning. Harry Blake was there at 8:30, seated at the wheel of his own Dyer.

Albertson & Co. had not provided him with a new car for demonstration purposes. Therefore he drove his own, which was 3 years old and had seen so much hard usage that it should have been painted with service stripes.

By the time Mr. Albertson had succeeded in organizing a somewhat aimless pursuit of Harry the latter was driving Mr. Hammond up hill and down dale, through sand and mud, across fields and over streams, in low, high, intermediate and reverse.

"I brought this old car," he explained, "because I wanted you to know that Dyers hold up. Three years old and as good as new! Any new car will perform well, but for stages you need cars that last. Watch this!"

He drove around a "street closed" sign as if it did not exist and started up a long, steep hill. The street was being prepared for paving, and the roadbed consisted of loose sand and dirt to the depth of a foot. The car, in low gear, climbed steadily upward and reached the top with plenty of reserve power under its hood.

At the summit Harry turned around and started down. He allowed the car to go at an alarming speed. Below them was the intersection of a crowded boulevard. As they sped downward, throwing up clouds of dust, Mr. Hammond closed his eyes and drew a long breath.

"Stop it!" he cried.

And midway down the hill Harry threw on the brakes. Instantly, it seemed, the car came to an abrupt halt.

"I just wanted to show you what Dyer four-wheel brakes will do," grinned Harry.

Mr. Hammond's face was white. "Don't do that again!" he begged.

"All right," smiled Harry. "But a stage ought to be able to stop anywhere."

The demonstration continued, along less thrilling lines, with Harry making the Dyer go through its paces. Mr. Hammond made few comments, but Harry knew that he was impressed.

Mr. Hammond looked at his watch.

"You asked for two hours," he said, "and you've had them. I've an important appointment. Can you get me to 8th and Broadway in twenty minutes?"

"Sure!" promised Harry. "I just wanted to show you what we could do in the way of speed, and this is the chance."

The Dyer leaped forward, responsive to Harry's pressure on the accelerator. The engine purred happily. The speedometer registered forty—fifty—sixty miles.

At this hour the boulevard had relatively little traffic, and Harry was familiar enough witht the habits of traffic officers to take a chance.

"That's fast enough!" cried Mr. Hammond.

"Sure!" agreed Harry. "We can do eighty if we want to. And we can take a turn at sixty. What's more, we can keep up this pace for hours. Can't hurt a Dyer engine!"

They were doing nearly sixty miles an hour when, about a hundred yards ahead of them, they saw a woman and a child start across the street. The woman did not see the oncoming car; she was looking in the other direction.

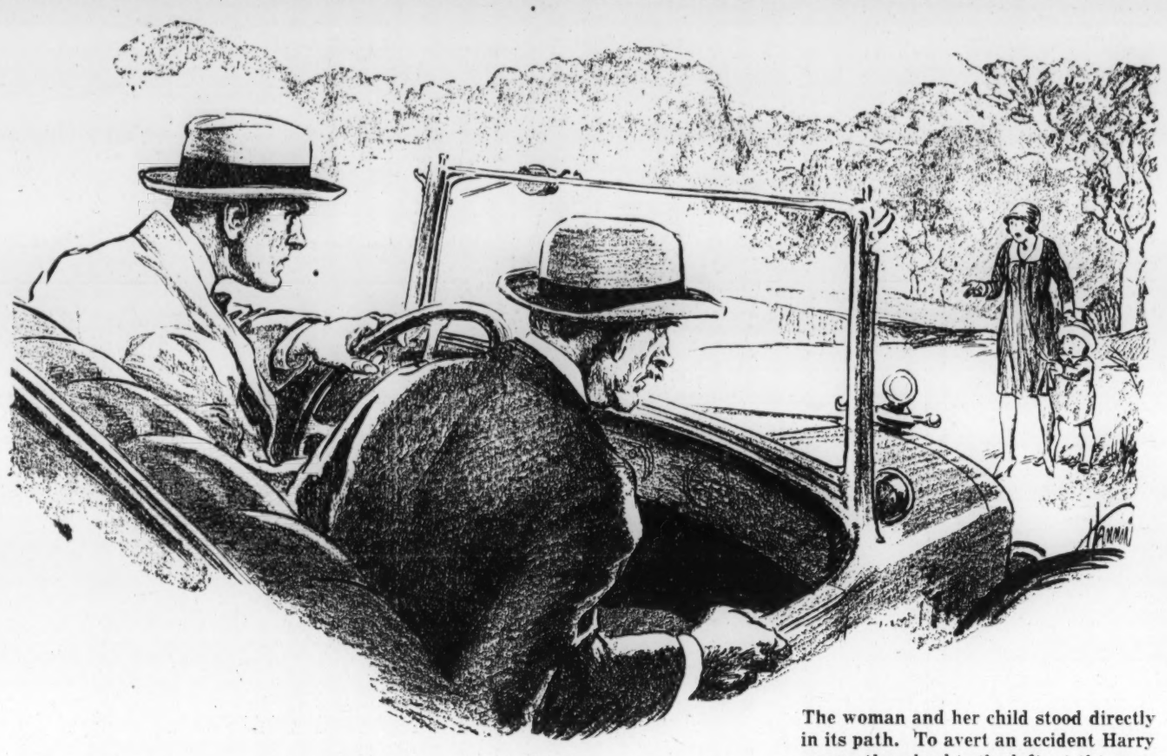

Harry shut off the gas, but the momentum of the car carried them forward.

"Can't you stop it?" demanded Mr. Hammond.

The woman now saw the approaching car. She stopped, gathered the child in her arms, and stood as immobile as a statue. Her eyes were closed and she waited, holding her breath, for the automobile to strike her. She was unable to move, paralyzed with fear.

Harry put on the brake. The car slowed down, but its momentum still carried it forward at an alarming rate. With the gas off and the foot brake on it was moving at perhaps twenty miles an hour.

The woman and her child stood directly in its path. To avert an accident Harry swung the wheel to the left, at the same time reaching for the emergency brake.

The woman and the child stood directly in its path. To avert an accident Harry swung the wheel to the left, at the same time reaching for the emergency brake. He pulled it back and the car stopped, throwing its two passengers forward. A little to the left, and five feet from the woman, it had come to a standstill.

The woman slowly opened her eyes. They were wide and frightened. She drew a long breath, clasped her child more tightly, and then smiled.

"I—I—I was scared to death!" she admitted.

"I'm sorry we frightened you," said Harry, with a responsive smile. "I was going pretty fast, but with this car I can always stop when I want to."

He looked at Mr. Hammond, whose face was white and drawn. He sat there speechless, looking with terrified eyes at the woman before them. Before he had recovered Harry had again apologized to the woman, she had crossed the street safely, and Harry had proceeded townward.

As they neared Mr. Hammond's destination Harry turned again to the stage man.

"I told you," he said, "that I wouldn't bore you with a lot of sales talk. But now you've seen what a Dyer will do. When you decide to buy 'em, look me up at Albertson's. Maybe you'll want to see if any other car can do what we've done, but——"

"I wouldn't go through a demonstration like this again for a hundred thousand dollars!" announced Mr. Hammond positively. "You haven't bored me with sales talk, young man, but you've knocked ten years off my life!"

And, ignoring the card which Harry was offering him, Mr. Hammond got out of the car and strode off, without so much as a word of farewell. Harry looked after him, whistled in a surprised fashion, and with a frown turned his automobile back toward Albertson's.

For once his confidence was shaken. Hammond seemed really quite angry. He hadn't even said good-by; he had ignored Harry's card.

Was he sold on Dyers, or wasn't he? That was the question uppermost in Harry's mind, and he could find no answer to it.

But after parking his car in the garage he burst into the Albertson office with his usual comet-like speed and brightness. Of course Hammond was sold! As soon as he recovered from his shock he'd call him up and close the deal. Harry's confidence was completely restored.

"There he is now!" exclaimed three men as Harry entered.

And they ran toward him like three deputy sheriffs about to arrest a desperate criminal. One of them was Mr. Albertson himself.

Margaret Hughes, witnessing the attack upon Harry from her desk across the room, half rose from her chair. Poor Harry, she thought. And she wished that she might do something for him.

If Harry was surprised by the enthusiasm with which he was welcomed to the office he quickly recovered. Before Mr. Albertson, more apoplectic than he had been two hours before, could speak, Harry took him by the arm.

"Greetings, boss!" he said cordially. "Come into your office—I've got a lot to tell you."

He led his angry, inarticulate employer into the latter's sanctum, closed the door upon the other two men, and sat down in one of the most comfortable chairs.

Margaret's heart stopped beating and she smiled. It was impossible to pity Harry, and it was impossible not to be overwhelmed by his amazing nerve.

Involuntarily Margaret began to think about her trousseau. Then she blushed and furiously pounded the keys of her typewriter.

In the privacy of Mr. Albertson's office, Harry launched forth upon an account of his morning's work. He had plenty of opportunity, for his employer could not recover control of his anger and voice for some 15 minutes. By that time Harry had explained his activity of the forenoon.

But, once started, Mr. Albertson was himself no slouch as a speaker. And when he began to speak Harry Westcott Blake hadn't a chance.

Mr. Albertson's words came so fast and furiously that Harry sat, mouth open in surprise, and allowed himself to be talked down. At the end of his oration, without wasting words or seeking soft synonyms for harsh terms, Mr. Albertson delivered a masterly summary of all he had said.

"You're a blasted, impertinent young idiot!" he charged. "You knew that I wanted to handle Hammond! Now you've butted in and lost him! Anybody but you could see that—and you're blinded by your overdeveloped nerve. I knew Saturday that you wouldn't do. You know cars, I suppose, or the factory wouldn't have recommended you as it did. But you don't know anything else. I had planned to let you out, gently, today. Now you're plain, ordinary fired! And the sooner you get out the happier I'll be!"

"But—but I think I've landed Hammond!" protested Harry. "Wait; you'll see!"

"Bah!" snapped Mr. Albertson. "Frightened him to death, and he's got a weak heart! You could never land him that way! Get out!"

Harry rose, dignity and belligerence combined in his air.

"But if I have landed him," he said calmly, "when you couldn't, and none of your salesmen could, perhaps you'll be fair enough to pay me the commission due me."

"If you've landed him," agreed Mr. Albertson, "you'll get your commission. But I ought to sue you for damages for ruining our chances with him. I could have landed him!"

"Yes, you could!" Harry was impertinent enough to say.

Then he left the room and wandered very unlike a comet now into the outer office.

Margaret saw him emerge from Mr. Albertson's sanctum, saw the look of dejection on his face, and knew a queer kind of happiness in the thought that he had failed. Failure, somehow, made him seem more human.

It was lunchtime. Harry made his way to Margaret's desk. His approach was diffident and unassuming.

"Miss Hughes," he said with a little smile—and he had always before dared to call her Margaret!—"I guess you needn't get that trousseau ready just yet. But will you please have lunch with me?"

Margaret hesitated, but she accepted. Harry led her to the best restaurant in the near neighborhood, and then chose a corner table.

Harry leaned forward, and, although his wonted confidence seemed lacking, he gave the impression of a deeper sincerity.

"The boss informed me of my shortcomings," he said with the same smile. "It seems that there are many of them. He didn't leave me in doubt about a single one. It appears that I'm a complete dub, and fired besides! That's what gets me—why, I've never been fired in my life before! Imagine—firin' me!"

"But Mr. Hammond——" said Margaret. "You didn't sell him the cars?"

"No, I guess not. The boss says I didn't, and I don't know. He's got a weak heart—Hammond, I mean, not Albertson—and I didn't know it. I just about scared him to death, and, according to the boss, he won't be able to think of a Dyer now without fainting. Well——"

He looked so subdued that Margaret was quite touched.

"Well," said Harry, "I guess I did fail, as you said I would."

"I'm sorry," Margaret had to hold her hand firmly under the table. Otherwise it would have reached out and touched him. "I—I didn't really mean it."

"You didn't?" cried Harry, and he leaned forward with some of his old eagerness. "Margaret, go ahead and get that trousseau ready! Let's get married, will you? Oh, I know I haven't a job. But I can get one—I'll jump into a shop as chief mechanic. There are only two or three first-class mechanics in this town. I'll make enough, at that, for us. At least for a beginning. Will you, Margaret?"

Margaret didn't answer. There were many things to be considered, she felt, but how could she consider any of them with her heart beating that way, crying out to her to say "yes" in loud and no uncertain terms? She shouldn't think, and she couldn't speak.

"We won't have much for a while," went on Harry, "on a mechanic's wages. But it will always be enough. And with you—to give me confidence—I'll do really great things!"

"With me—what?" gasped Margaret.

"Why, to give me confidence!" Harry repeated. "There's nothing like love, so I've heard, to give a man confidence!"

Margaret laughed.

"If you had any more confidence," she said, "you'd be unbearable!"

"Well, then—— Well, marry me anyway!"

Margaret studied him for a moment. "I think I'd rather marry you on a mechanic's wages," she said, "or even on less than that than if you had sold those cars to Hammond. You're quite—well, lovable—when you don't look so Napoleonic!"

"Then you will?" demanded Harry.

And Margaret, studying him for a moment longer, followed the bidding of her overworked heart and nodded affirmatively.

So engrossed were they thereafter that they might have been alone together on a desert island.

The walls of the restaurant melted away and were replaced by roseate clouds. The other eaters likewise evaporated, and Margaret and Harry were as isolated as if they had scarlet fever. They saw nothing, heard nothing, save each other.

At another table in the same restaurant sat Mr. Albertson. He was eating from force of habit, for his appetite, usually hearty, had been destroyed by his anger of the morning.

Concentrating upon the loss of Hammond's business, he likewise saw and heard nothing. If he had been aware of Harry's presence he would have left the restaurant in a temper. Luckily, he was not aware of it.

As he brooded upon the stupidity of fresh young men Mr. Albertson was suddenly distracted by a hearty greeting. Looking up, he beheld the smiling face of Mr. Hammond.

This in itself was unusual. Mr. Hammond almost never smiled; he was afraid it would affect his heart.

Mr. Hammond's weak heart was widely advertised; it was generally known that he must be handled with soft gloves because of that disabled organ. But now he was smiling; more, he was chuckling. And there was a heartiness in his voice and manner that did not suggest the invalid.

He took the chair opposite Mr. Albertson.

"Well, old man," he boomed heartily, "I want to congratulate you."

"Me? What for?" Mr. Albertson scowled. He didn't care for jokes on himself.

"Maybe you don't know it," laughed Hammond, "but you've got in your employ a boy that can give all the specialists four aces and beat 'em at their own game. Why, if I had met him two years ago I would have saved $5,000 in medical fees!"

"What do you mean?"

"Why, that young fellow that works for you—Lake, Blake or whatever his name is—the one that gave me a demonstration this morning—he——"

"I fired him this morning!"

"Fired him? Why, man you're crazy!"

"Huh!" snorted Mr. Albertson. "Didn't he almost kill you? Yes, I fired him as soon as he came in! Say—you're not by any chance still considering Dyer cars, are you?"

"Considering them? Lord, no. I've made up my mind. I'm buying them! But I'm only buying them from that young man—Lake, Blake or whatever his name is. I want to see that boy get ahead. Do you know what he did for me?"

"What?"

"He cured me! That's what he did! Of course, I was just about a nervous wreck when he got through demonstrating that car. And the doctors had told me that a shock like that last one—where he almost killed a woman and child—would also kill me.

"Well, it didn't. Do you understand? It didn't! Right after that demonstration I dragged myself to another specialist—just came from him this minute—expecting to drop on the street. This new specialist—cost more than any of the others—I asked him if I was going to die. He laughed at me. 'Why,' said he, 'your heart's good for fifty years, if the rest of you is just as good!'

"Do you see what that means? It means"—Mr. Hammond's voice rose to a pitch of delight—"that I can play golf, and bust speed laws, and get mad when I feel like it! And that young fellow—Lake, Blake or whatever his name is—it took him to show me that I was all right!"

Mr. Albertson could think of only one thing at a time.

"And you're buying Dyer cars?" he asked.

"Sure! Twenty-five of 'em! After a demonstration like that, why should I buy anything else?"

Mr. Albertson was a bit dazed, and his eye roved the room. He was a fair man, and just. When his eye fell upon Harry, who looked very humble as he gazed into the eyes of Margaret, he smiled.

"Wait a minute, Hammond," he said. "I'll be right back."

Mr. Albertson rose and walked across the room. He paused near Harry's table.

"And you don't mind me—being a failure?" Harry was asking.

"I don't mind," whispered Margaret, dreamily. "I love you."

"Darling!" said Harry.

Mr. Albertson ambled back to his table and to Hammond.

"I was going to tell him," he pointed to Harry, "that he was still on the pay roll. But he wouldn't know what I was talking about. He's got the weak heart now."

the path of the Avenue and hiding the White House from the approaching citizen, the great building was set, and there it is likely to remain.

The beautiful south portico, one of the most impressively satisfying structures in the world, and the monumental statues of Hamilton and Sherman constitute an imposing end for the "Government Avenue;" more imposing than would have been the White House grounds and building. No one, probably, would seriously propose the removal of the great and beautiful Treasury building, for the sake of literal conformity to the original plan. But may the commissioners in charge be guided not to sprinkle the new buildings about the space "south of the Avenue," but rather to acquire the property still in private hands on the south side of the street, and give us a real "Government Avenue" of dignified and beautiful buildings with appropriate surroundings. So prays one citizen of Washington.

An interesting story, touching all phases of our national life and representing all sections could be written of the great parades which have passed up and down this Avenue in the last hundred years. Presidents have ridden down the Avenue to the Capitol, to give their oath of faithful performance of the duties of their great office, and have ridden back to begin the fulfillment of that oath accompanied both ways by troops of citizen soldiery. Sometimes the lifeless forms of those who have died in office by disease or assassination have been borne down the Avenue with muffled drums and reversed arms of the soldiers, to lie in state under the great dome. I must mention again the troops who answered Lincoln's first call and whom I watched marching up the Avenue to greet the President, and assure him of their readiness to do battle for liberty and union; the gentlemen from New York, the Seventh and Seventy-first regiments, in their natty dress uniforms, the more plainly dressed, but splendidly equipped regiments from Rhode Island, with Gov. Sprague and Gen. Burnside; the Ellsworth fire zouaves, the Sixty-ninth regiment of New York Irish-Americans, and the Seventy-ninth Highlanders, in their Scotch plaids and kilts; the lumbermen from the Maine woods, and the German-American riflemen. Up that same Avenue marched the soldiers returning victorious from the battlefields of the war between the States.

I SAW the inaugural parade when Garfield was made President, and when to me the most notable feature of the pageant was the presence in that marching company of the group of Southern gentlemen from Virginia, the famous Richmond Blues, there as living witnesses of the passing of the bitterness of the old struggle and prophets of the days to come when men from the South and men from the North should march side by side to give freedom to Cuba, and then to save Europe and the world from the domination of the German military machine. So on the broad pavement of the Avenue nowhere else has been written the history of our country in the past, and there, too, will be recorded the history of its future.

In the days before the coming of the automobile, the Avenue was a great promenade for distinguished and undistinguished citizens of Washington. Particularly at the hour when the government departments closed their doors, the same crowd, only minus the feminine element, which now rushes to the street cars or races homeward in the motor cars, would be seen leisurely strolling along the broad sidewalks of the Avenue. Every person famous in the government might be seen in that company; Presidents and ex-Presidents, cabinet ministers, diplomats and heads of departments. Sometimes, in those days one might see the picturesque form of the "good gray poet," Walt Whitman, or other men and women of note.

Almost every afternoon the famous old Washington would-be dandy and disreputable but easily forgiven deadbeat, Beau Hickman, would graciously greet you as he passed. One of the tales commonly told about this notorious character contains questionable features if studied as to its accordance with exact fact, but well illustrates the methods by which he maintained his picturesque career. His top hat having become so shabby that he felt the necessity of its renewal, and he having reason to think that he could secure a new one through some easy-mark acquaintance in Baltimore, he enters a train with a card closely resembling the usual ticket stuck in the hat ribbon. As the conductor enters the car Beau puts his head out of the window and is closely engaged in watching the landscape. When the conductor touches his elbow to gain his attention, Beau jerks his head from the window, his hat is knocked off and the pseudo ticket is lost forever. Probably no conductor on the Baltimore and Ohio system would have refused to pass Beau under the circumstances, and he could safely be left to devise his own scheme for a free passage back to Washington. How Beau Hickman carried on till old age, and under what conditions he at last shuffled off this mortal coil, I should like to learn. My impression of him is that he was a harmless sort of vagabond, with just enough self-respect to insist on being decently clothed, and powers of persuasion and invention sufficient to carry him through without serious loss to any of his easy-natured patrons and helpers.

A very different and even more conspicuous figure, always to be seen on the Avenue in those days, was that of Dr. Mary Walker, the pioneer of feminine dress reform. In her closely-fitting black frock coat and trousers, carrying a natty walking stick, she was a continuous and conspicuous protest against the monstrous absurdities of feminine dress in those days. It was the time of enormous crinoline, closely followed by the even more atrocious fashion of bustles and street-sweeping trains. Dr. Walker's costume was perfectly modest, decent and comfortable. The only reasonable objection to it was its imitation of masculine fashions. There were various efforts on the part of conservative authorities to exercise some kind of discipline against her; but they all were wrecked by the manifest innocence and philanthropic character of her motives, and she continued to make her protest against the absurdities of feminine dress while she lived.

Soon after our return to Washington in 1920, an old friend was driving us about the city, showing us the most noteworthy features. As he turned into the Avenue from the Mall he said: "Now keep your eyes straight ahead, look neither to the right nor the left." So we did, with the beautiful dome before us, until we turned into the east plaza of the Capitol, and could look at its superb facade. May the day come when he who is jealous for the beauty and dignity of the national city will not have to shut his eyes as he passes over the great thoroughfare from the Capitol to the Treasury.

Color Blindness Hereditary.

Color blindness, recent studies seem to indicate, is hereditary and is the result of a defect in the central nervous system, says the July Popular Science Monthly. It occurs oftener among boys and men than among girls and women, but in boys it is frequently only color ignorance, rather than an inherent defect.

As a corrective, special attention now is being given in the public schools to developing color sense among all the pupils.

TOOK THE HINT IN REVERSE.

A countryman came to Boston to visit some relatives and to see the sights. He remained until patience on the part of his hosts, a married couple, ceased to be a virtue.

"Don', you think, my dear fellow," remarked the husband one day, "that your wife and children must miss you?"

"Hadn't thought of that," was the calm reply. "Thanks for the suggestion; I'll send for them."

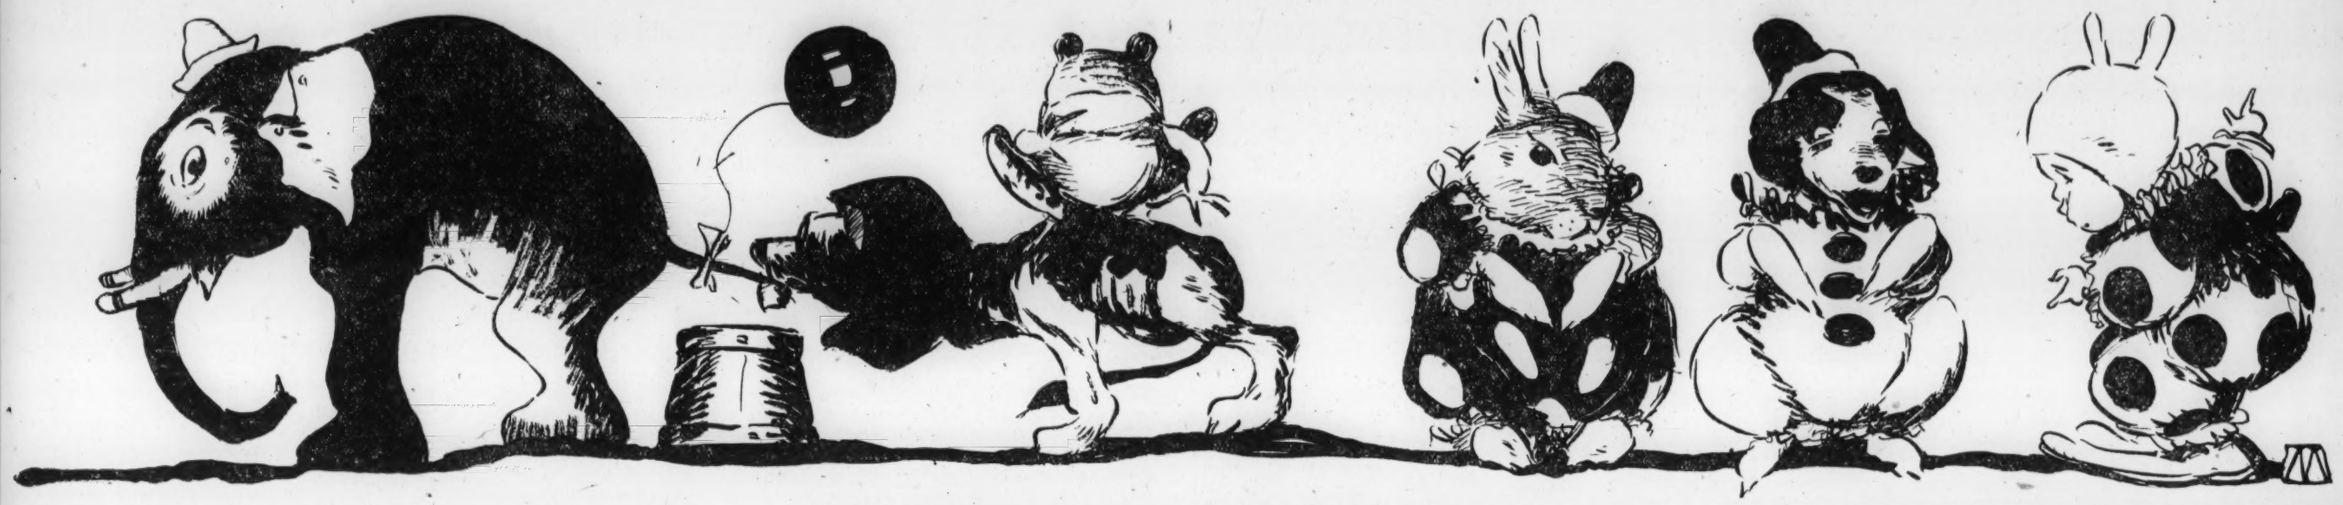

'JECTIONS WANTED.

Little Jimmy watched the painter tint the ceiling in our dining room and asked: "Please, Mr. Painter, can me tum up?"

The painter, busy on the top of his ladder, answered off-hand: "I've no objections!"

Jimmy came racing into the kitchen to me and asked in a most worried and concerned manner: "Muvver, can me go to a 'tore and buy sombe 'jections for the painter man?"

THE BUNNY TOTS — THE BIG CIRCUS PARADE

Written and Illustrated by Edward McCandlish.

So many different stories have been told about what happened when the Circus came to town that we are going to tell you now just how it all occurred.

After all of the circus wagons had been driven into town the circus people turned in and began unloading; the "big top" canvas was laid on the ground; the big blue tent poles were laid out in order; a gang of tent men caught hold of certain ropes that were attached to pulleys and when they commenced hauling on the ropes the big tents began slowly raising into place, and in a few minutes the Bunny Tots, who were hidden away in a pile of trunks—well, the Bunny Tots saw the big tents slowly raised into place, the flags and pennants were run up to the tops of the poles, and in less than an hour the tents were ready, the wagons were all in place and the circus was ready for the morning's procession to begin.

At about half past ten o'clock in the morning the Bunny Tots heard a bugle blow; the "steam calliope" started up; the big elephants began filing out of the menagerie tent and the Bunny Tots knew that the parade through Town was about to begin.

One after another the big gilded wagons rattled by the place where the Bunny Tots were hidden; the elephants and the band in the lead, with a "mahout," or driver, riding on the head of each of the big beasts. Then came the dromedaries, and buffalos, and camels, and beautiful white horses ridden by lovely painted ladies with ostrich plumes in their hats. Then came another band, with the clowns on their donkeys bringing up the rear.

Well, you can just imagine the Bunny Tots then.

Their eyes looked as big as plates and saucers.

They watched the procession from their hiding place among the trunks and boxes, and they stood THAT just as long as they could. And then—just as one of the biggest and gaudiest of the carved and painted wagons rattled by—for the wheels on circus wagons ALWAYS rattle! The Circus men see to THAT!—why—Tiny Bob Bunny Tot scampered out of his hiding place and shinnied up a tent rope and dropped down on the top of the big wagon. In less than a moment the other Bunny Tots followed and crouched down back of the gilded carvings and went rolling away into town!

Well, I'll bet you a red apple that not one single person who watched the circus parade that morning had the slightest suspicion that such a little group of people were hidden away so close at hand!

The procession rolled proudly through the Main Street of the village; made a turn at the corner of the Round House and came back down Ashville Avenue, with the band playing, the flags flying, the steam calliope going full tilt, the folks along the route cheering and cheering, and the clowns blowing kisses to everybody as they ambled by.

At last they arrived back at the grounds of the circus, where peanut stands and lemonade booths had already sprung up like so many mushrooms while the parade was in town, and two big elephants were slowly pushing the blue-and-gold ticket wagon into its place on the lot.

The Bunny Tots kept very still and quiet while the big wagon that they rode on was rolled into the center of the largest tent. Then came an hour or so of comparative quiet while the circus folks went to the "mess tent" to eat dinner or laid down in straw piles for a half hour of sleep.

Pretty soon there were sounds of shouting voices outside the big tent and the hum of many voices talking. Then the Bunny Tots peeped over the sides of the wagon and saw the crowds of people slowly filing into the big tent. Faster and faster and faster came the crowds of people! Young people, old people, children, nurses, big families, little families, peanut vendors, balloon "hawkers," clowns, dogs, ponies, camels, horses! The Bunny Tots became so excited that they were almost ready to take wing and fly!

And then the big circus performance began, and the Bunny Tots played a part in that performance which was all quite a big surprise to THEM. And we will tell you all about that in our next Circus story.

"Draw a shoe-buttoner," said the teacher. "That is shaped like an interrogation point."

The boy took the crayon and drew a hairpin.

"What's that thing?" asked the teacher.

"Why," replied the boy, "that's the only shoe-buttoner I ever saw."

The Friends.

(Winner of $1 Cash Prize.)

One summer day a little boy came to spend the summer at a resort. He went outside to play.

Next door to him lived a little girl named Frances. She was 6 years old.

Frances came out on her porch also. She said, "Our house is prettier than yours."

Then said Kenneth, "Maybe so, just because it has a pointed roof."

"And we can change our house into a house without a pointed roof," said Frances.

"Well," said Kenneth, "you can change it, for all I care."

Kenneth was a little boy 9 years old. His brother Bobby was 7 years old. Kenneth had come down to look at the cottage with his father.

His mother and his brother had not come to the resort then, but Mr. Brown, Kenneth's father, brought them down the next day.

Kenneth met Frances and so did Bobby. Frances said, "I bet you don't know my name."

"No," said Bobby, "what is your name?"

"Why, my name is Frances."

"Frances, did I tell you daddy is going to get some bicycles tonight and we can ride them tomorrow."

The next morning they got up and dressed and pranced downstairs.

There were their bicycles.

They played with them all day.

For a week they played with their bicycles and the next day it rained.

"Mother says we'll have to play inside today," said Bobby. "Let's play store."

"No, let's play Indians, Frances."

The next day they went down to the beach.

Bobby went into the water; the water was low, but there was an awful undertow.

The undertow was pulling him out into the water.

He called for help, but no one heard him except a boy quite a distance away.

Bob was sinking, but he was just saved in time. The boy brought him to shore.

Mr. Brown made inquiries about the boy. The boy said, "I am an orphan from that orphan asylum over there," pointing to a group of children.

Mr. Brown adopted the boy and made him happy.

Weeks passed. It was the 9th of September. Mrs. Brown became very sick.

The doctor said she was very sick and the next day he said she had pneumonia.

The boys' faces got red and they said, "Mother, if you get better, we will be good boys."

Mrs. Brown was better in three weeks. She said, "We will go back to Newark the day after tomorrow."

As they were leaving, Kenneth said to Frances, "We are going back to Newark. Good-by." And off they went on the big train.

Why We Should Have an Education.

(Winner of $1 Cash Prize.)

We all like to travel and see the world, to have a car, to own our homes. To do this we must have money; to have money we must work, and to secure work we must have an education.

No good company will take uneducated men and women. Some people say, "Huh, people don't have to be educated to be great. Look at Abraham Lincoln." But the Abraham Lincolns are few and far apart.

Between the ages of 12 and 16 boys get the money craze. They quit school and go to work. In their lifetime they make a whole lot less than the boy who starts to work at the end of high school does in his, and the high school graduate makes a whole lot less than the boy who starts work after college.

You are always seeing things in the papers about millionaires. Every one of them has had some sort of an education. They secured high paying positions, and slowly became what they are now. Every now and then you'll hear some boy say how he's going to dig up some pirate's treasure and become a millionaire. There are a few buried treasures left, but it will take hard work and a long time to get them.

Uneducated people mostly land in jail or in the poorhouse. Get an education while you have the chance, and when you grow up you won't regret it.

There was a little boy,
Who would always sit around;
Every time you spoke to him,
He would always cry and frown.

He would always climb the trees,
And look about the world;
Every time he looked around

One day he went ahunting
And found a pretty rabbit.
He said to the little bunny,
"You have such nice, sweet habits.

"I can not bear to kill you;
I'll take you home with me,
Where you'll have plenty of grass to eat
And roam around and be free."

Betty Owen, a Pioneer.

(Winner of $1 Cash Prize.)

In 1848, when gold was discovered in California, a small band of pioneers set out from Kentucky, traveling westward. Many of the pioneers took their families with them to the promised riches. Among them was Betty Owen, a young girl who had been an orphan since early childhood. Betty had begged the Kentuckians to take her with them, so they reluctantly consented and so Betty's adventures began.

Several days had passed and few remained of the brave pioneers. Many had died and some had turned back in despair, but Betty Owen, still uncomplaining, went on. Two tiny tots had been left in her care when their mother died on the desert and the young girl had grown to love them dearly.

One day Indians attacked the small band of Kentuckians. Behind covered wagons they shot and killed many Indians. While Betty was loading guns an Indian crept stealthily into one of the wagons and kidnaped the two little boys whom she cared for. The girl turned only in time to see the Indian speeding away with the children upon his horse. Quickly she leaped upon a horse with a gun in one hand and a whip in another. On and on she rode until she was two yards from the Indian. Then she shot her gun and the red man fell heavily to the ground.

The Indian's horse was so frightened that it leaped into the air and speeded on at breakneck speed, leaving Betty Owen behind in the dust. Betty hastened after the runaway and with quick action the horse was stopped. The girl took the small boys from the runaway horse and rode back to camp.

A few days later they arrived in California, where Betty Owen was to have more adventures, even greater than those she had experienced crossing the desert.

Ralph Layton's Last Run.

(Honorable Mention.)

It was 10 o'clock on the night of June 15, 1917, when a city in France, called Lyons, was crowded with American and French soldiers, who were awaiting the battle of the next day.

Among these troops was a young soldier by the name of Ralph Layton, who had left his home and family for a far greater claim, his country.

Suddenly into the camp came an American spy, who had just returned from spying on the German frontier, and had learned that the Americans were outnumbered 5 to 1, and would all be killed unless recruits could be obtained before 8 hours.

To get to the nearest French camp, the messenger would have to go through the German lines, and would have no chance of getting through alive.

Ralph Layton offered to go. The officers and soldiers did not want him to take such a risk, because their army was doomed anyway, but he insisted on going.

Finally the general gave him a message to deliver to the commander of the French fort at St. Etienne.

The general told him to put on a German uniform so that he might get through that way, but Ralph replied, "If I am to be shot, I would die in peace in my own uniform."

He then went out of the camp and disappeared into the darkness of the night. He laid down and crawled along the ground.

Suddenly he heard some footsteps; he laid down flatter than ever, in the tall grass; he waited, and a German sentinel walked past.

Ralph then crawled to a large tree, from the shelter of which he looked into the German camps to see which place would be the best to go past.

Presently he saw a camp where the German officers were busily engaged in talking, so that he would not be heard.

So, lying on the ground once more, he crawled toward the camp, and passed by it safely.

He knew now that the worst danger was over, so he crawled on a little further where he got up and ran as he never had before.

When he was nearly exhausted, he reached the fort, and delivered the message to the general, who replied that he would send some men as soon as he could get word to them, and for Ralph to tell the soldiers at the camp to hold their ground until the recruits reached there.

After resting for a minute, he ran toward his lines.

When he was approaching the German ranks, he threw himself down and crawled toward the same spot that he had gone through before; when he was very near the tent, he stopped and listened.

Since he knew German slightly, he decided to find out what was being said; he learned that the German army was going to form a circle around the American camp, so that there would be no means of escape.

Ralph had heard enough! He crawled past the camp.

Just when he reached the top of the hill that led to his lines, a German sentinel saw him, and taking aim, shot at him.

A dark form was then seen to throw up its hands and roll down the embankment into the marsh below.

What the Old Trunk Held.

(Honorable Mention.)

Edith looked in dismay at the pile of pretty old-fashioned dresses on the floor beside her and wondered how she would ever be able to choose one for the party. Deeper and deeper in the old trunk she dug, and the pile grew larger and larger.

After throwing a handful of garments on the floor, she glanced around and noticed a package wrapped in paper. Curious to know what it was she untied the string and the most beautiful green she had ever seen fell in soft folds over her lap. As she slowly lifted it a ray of sunshine from the attic window made the changeable green and gold sparkle like millions of tiny diamonds. The shimmering silvery web lace made the dress lovely in itself. The delicate perfume of sandalwood that drifted from the crisp old silk seemed to recall old memories of dances, parties, and weddings. Grandmother must have been the belle of the ball when she appeared in this gorgeous finery.

Edith slowly awoke from her daydreams and smiled happily, for there was no doubt in her mind as to what she would wear to the party that night.

What the Flag Means to Me.

(Honorable Mention.)

I sometimes wonder what the flag means to me, a child of the United States of America. Of course, seeing it stirs in me a feeling that is called patriotism.

But what does it really mean to my inner self?

Surely not a piece of red, white and blue bunting, a thing to be ridiculed.

No! A thousand times no!

It is a wonderful, glorious banner, representing liberty, equality and fraternity.

The blue of azure field expresses truth. The pure white of the stripes, purity, and the red humanity, the blood that our heroes have given in this banner's cause.

All together, red, white and blue—truth, purity and humanity—they make the flag for that great nation, "The land of the free and the home of the brave."

For summer is here without a doubt,
And merrily we run and shout.

PREVENTING CANCER OF THE MOUTH.

When he examines his patient's mouth, the dentist sees more than the teeth. He must recognize the injurious effects that abnormal teeth, artificial or real, may produce. When necessary, he warns against such serious dangers, because they often lead to cancer of the mouth.

The upper teeth of a stock and bond salesman were elongated and projected so that every time he talked he bit his lip. The inflamed mark could be seen on his lip. This continued irritation developed into cancer. It was unfortunate that the condition was originally neglected, because it could have been prevented in two ways—by extracting the offending teeth and replacing them with a plate, or by straightening them through the use of appliances.

A country storekeeper had a lower plate that was constantly shifting and irritating his gums. First the gums became sore, then hardened, and finally cancer of the jaw set in. His life was despaired of, but by cutting away half of his jaw it was saved, although the operation left him with mutilated features. This cancer could have been averted by, having the plate made correctly in the first place and then having it trimmed down so that it would not irritate the tissues.

Cancer From Abscess.

For two years an 8-year-old boy had an abscessed six-year molar in his mouth. When he was brought to the dentist a hard growth was noticed on the gums. This growth was removed and a section placed under a microscope for examination. It was found to be the beginning of a cancer and the growth was removed at once from the boy's mouth so that there was no serious after effects. Had this growth, accidentally discovered, been allowed to remain in his mouth, it would probably have developed into a malignant cancer.

A school teacher had two broken down roots in the lower jaw. She was advised to have these roots taken out, but as she dreaded the pain of extraction, the operation was delayed. Meanwhile the roots kept chipping off, the gums became inflamed and sore. Eventually the tissue broke down and developed into a cancer that caused the loss of her life.

A vaudeville actress had a certain point in one cheek pinched between two of her teeth every time she closed her mouth. She paid no attention to it and the irritation continued until a cancer formed at the point of injury. Had she gone to her dentist when she first felt the teeth rubbing against her cheek, he would have ground off the sharp points that were doing the damage. If this was inadvisable, extracting the offending teeth would have prevented this cancerous condition.

Caused by Irritation.

Many other examples might be given but the foregoing will show the danger of cancer of the mouth in tissues subjected to continued irritation.

Once these seemingly simple growths have gotten into the surrounding tissues, or cells from the growth have entered the blood vessels or lymphatics, to be carried to distant parts of the body, there to take root and grow, the condition becomes hopeless and the patient must pay the penalty for his procrastination.

The operation for removal of these small growths is comparatively simple and leaves little or no disfigurement. Delay usually means a radical operation which is frequently mutilating and dangerous and offers the patient much less chance of a permanent cure.

In this connection, Dr. Judd of the Mayo clinic says: "Dentists can do a great deal to prevent cancer of the mouth, and all broken and roughened edges of teeth must be removed. Cleanliness in the care of the teeth must be insisted upon."

Dr. Crile, of Cleveland, has this to say in regard to cancer of the mouth: "To my knowledge, no cancer of the cheek, of the mucous membrane, or of the mouth cavity has ever grown upon normal, unmutilated, uninjured surface. I have never seen a cancer in the mouth in a perfectly sanitary mouth with normal teeth.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Parched Mouth.

Q. On account of a bad taste and dry mouth, I can not wear my upper plate at night, as you advise in your column. So far I haven't been able to discover the cause. I would like to wear my plate, but on account of the dryness and awfully parched feeling, I must remove them in order to have rest and sleep. Can you give me any suggestions to cure this condition?—W. F. G.

A. It isn't absolutely necessary to wear a plate at night. Doing so usually makes for greater comfort in wearing and getting accustomed to it. The dryness may be caused by breathing through the mouth; an infection about the lower teeth, in your case, may be the cause of the bad taste in the mouth. Other causes for dryness may be systemic rather than local since wearing a plate, after one is accustomed to it, does not bring about this condition.

Lisps in Speech.

Q. I have been wearing an upper plate for 15 years in comfort. Two weeks ago I had to have a new one made. It fits fine and is comfortable in every respect except that I noticed a decided lisp in my speech. This lisp is especially embarrassing when I am out in company. Is there anything that I can do to remove this speech defect?—E. G.

A. If the plate is properly made, the lisp will disappear in a few weeks. It is often more difficult to become accustomed to a new plate, after having worn one for a considerable time, than when the teeth are recently extracted. The tongue, lips and cheeks have adapted themselves to the old plate. When a new plate is made, the tongue has to become accustomed to the new environment created by the plate. Hence the speech defect.

Plates for Cleft Palate.

Q. Several years ago, I had an upper bridge fastened on four teeth. This bridge has become loose, and I would like to know if it can be put back in a satisfactory manner. If it can not be fixed, what would be the best thing to do? All of my upper teeth are out, except the four the bridge is fastened to. I have a cleft palate. Is there any success in plates for this?—J. B. S.

A. If the four remaining teeth are in good health, it is possible to keep them and use them as clasps for a partial plate which can be made to fill the cleft in the palate. If these teeth are diseased, they should be removed and a full plate made which can be designed to work out satisfactorily.

Nature's Plan.

Q. Recently, I had some artificial teeth made and noticed that the upper front teeth extend over the lower ones when I close my jaws. It has always been my impression that the teeth should meet when closed. Are these plates made right? Why do the upper teeth extend over the lower teeth?—S. E. H.

A. The plates are made right. Placing the teeth in this relation gives a scissors action so that the food can be cut and chewed. If the teeth were placed end to end, it would be possible only to tear the food and not to cut it.

DRESSING WOUNDS.

THIS is the method used by the surgeons of the Pullman company in treating cuts and ordinary wounds, according to Dr. R. J. Demotte: The skin around the wound is cleaned with benzine or alcohol. If it is a rather large wound, tincture of iodine is painted on the skin. No iodine is put into the wound itself. The wound is then opened wide with forceps. The surfaces are sponged with small gauze sponges saturated with 50 per cent alcohol or boric solution or sterile water. Strong alcohol is not used. The sponging must be done gently. If there are pockets in the wound that can not be readily reached in this way, they are cleaned by means of a little cotton on a toothpick or applicator. The cotton is saturated with sterile water or alcohol.

If the wound has shreds or ragged edges and walls, these are trimmed smooth with scissors. The wound is then loosely close either by sutures or by adhesive strips. If it is deep and irregular, a small strip of cellosilk is kept in the wound as a drain for a day or two. The whole is then loosely covered with a sterile, warm, wet dressing. This is moistened with hot water every two or three hours. Sometimes hot towels are kept over bad wounds for two or three days.

In this treatment the wound itself is not sterilized by any chemical antiseptic. The weak alcohol or boric acid solutions are cleansing agents and not disinfectants. Using iodine as an antiseptic on the nearby skin does no good. Using it on the bruised tissues of the wound does harm. The wound itself is disinfected by the blood and serum which oozes into it and which washes it out. The warm, moist dressings keep plenty of blood in the nearby tissues and keep up the oozing which cleans and purifies the wound.

Demotte says the Carriel-Dakin method of wound treatment which was so much used during the war did good because the chemical kept the wounds oozing. The ooze, and not the chemicals, disinfected the wound.

It will be remembered that during the war the salt treatment of wounds became popular. It was not claimed that the salt in the wound sterilized it. The contention was that it kept up an oozing and, in that way sterilization was brought about.

In an article in Manufacturers' News on "First Aid or Worst," Capt. R. G. Fisher tells of his experience in inspecting first aid cabinets in manufacturing plants. Most of them contain iodine, but in 99 per cent of the cabinets the iodine is black and spoiled. He sometimes finds mercurochrome which has spoiled. More often than not the chemicals in these cabinets are not fit to use.

The Pullman method avoids that danger by avoiding chemicals. The claim is that the nature method of disinfection is better than the chemical method, even when chemicals are at their best.

Frankly Speaking—
He's having a Regular Picnic

THE spice that Auth puts in frankfurters is exactly the amount of spice to put into the picnic lunch basket.

And be sure to put it where the youngsters can find it—because they won't rest until they do.

Then with each hand securely clutching a tender, juicy, spicy, tasty "frank" clamped in a roll—they'll give a demonstration of enjoyment and abandon that no picnic can get along without.

Why should a picnic be a stale affair—when Auth's "franks" are always so fresh?

Why should it be flat—when Auth's have so much flavor?

Why should it be a "tough time" for anyone—when Auth's have so much tenderness?

Why should it be burdensome—when wrapping a "frank" in a roll, tinged with mustard, is but the work of a second?

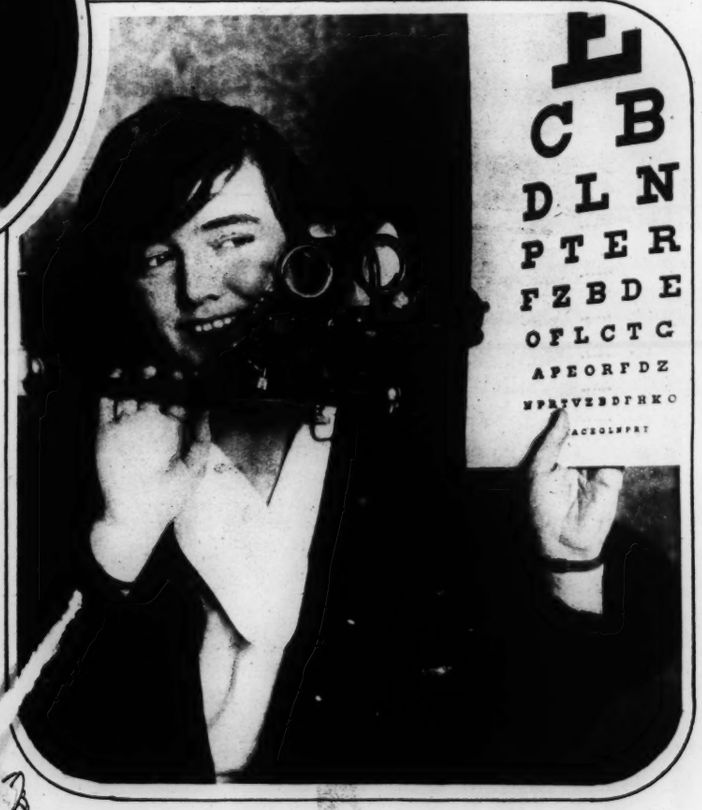

Why HAVE a picnic—unless you HAVE "franks?"

Why—you shouldn't! It just ISN'T good taste!

Win Health and Charm
The Secret Often Lies in Healthy Gums

DON'T let Pyorrhea or other insidious gum diseases mar your good looks—rob you of your natural personal charm and undermine your health. Your teeth may look sound and give no pain, yet you are not beyond the reach of Pyorrhea unless your gums are kept free of germ-laden mucin and are thoroughly nourished with good healthy blood.

At last, science has discovered a simple, natural way to a healthy mouth—so simple that you will wonder why it was never thought of before. The treatment may be taken at home easily, pleasantly and with amazingly quick results.

Dentists say "Use GUM RUB"

This latest scientific discovery points a new and amazingly simple way to keep gums alive, firm and healthy. It is called GUM RUB and is made according to an exclusive formula. GUM RUB is not a tooth paste, powder or mouth wash, but a delightful preparation, applied in a new way without the aid of a brush or apparatus of any kind. Ordinary tooth pastes, while good for the teeth, actually prevent the friction necessary to efficient gum massage. GUM RUB sets up the necessary friction immediately.

Amazing Results

The startling thing about GUM RUB is the quick-acting properties of the special ingredients it contains. After one or two applications at home, you will at once notice the difference in your mouth. Not only your gums, but your entire mouth will have that unmistakable feeling of health and perfect cleanliness that GUM RUB alone produces. Get GUM RUB today at any good drug store.

Millions know how to Keep Slender

In every crowd now note how slenderness prevails. Fat has become the exception. It is a blight to beauty, health and fitness, and people have learned to combat it. Go ask your friends how they lost their fat and follow their example.

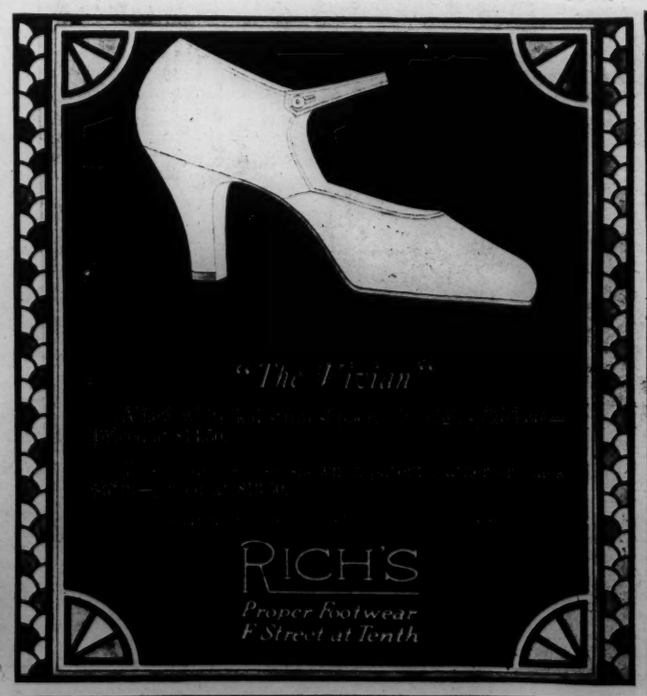

The leading way for 19 years has been Marmola Prescription Tablets. No abnormal exercise or diet is required. People simply take four tablets daily until the weight comes down to normal.

Those delighted users have told others until the use of Marmola has spread the world over. Your friends will tell you if you ask them. People who know are using over a million boxes yearly.

Go try Marmola—you owe that to yourself. Watch the weight come down, the vitality go up. Note the change that appears in a month. You'll be glad you learned about it.

All druggists sell Marmola at $1 a box. Or it is mailed direct in plain wrappers by Marmola Co., 1701 General Motors Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

CITY OF GOLD

18K

FOR TWO DAYS THE THREE ADVENTURERS HAVE CAMPED ON THE EDGE OF THE GREAT DESERT WAITING FOR A DENSE FOG TO LIFT - HIDDEN BEHIND IT'S MISTY CURTAIN MAY LIE THE ROAD TO THE WONDERFUL CITY OF GOLD —

GEE, I WISH THIS OLD FOG WOULD DISAPPEAR SO WE COULD SEE WHERE WE ARE - I HOPE IT WON'T LAST MUCH LONGER -

THIS COMMONPLACE ONE ECHOES YOUR AMIABLE WISH -

NO MAN CAN TELL WHAT WIND OR FOG WILL DO - WHEN I WAS SECOND MATE OF THE CLIPPER "SAUCY SUSAN" - WE SAILED THROUGH A FOG AS DARK AS NIGHT FOR TWO WEEKS - IT WAS LIKE SAILING THROUGH AN OCEAN GRAVE-YARD HAUNTED BY THE GHOSTS OF LOST SHIPS -

WE'LL HAVE TO LEAVE HERE SOON, AS OUR SUPPLY OF FOOD WILL NOT LAST MUCH LONGER AND NOT BEING ABLE TO TELL NIGHT FROM DAY MAKES ME FEEL KIND OF CREEPY -

IT HAS BEEN TRULY SAID THAT DARKNESS IS A CLOAK FOR SINNERS, BUT A DENSE FOG CANNOT BE DISPELLED BY A FAN -

WE'LL TRY AND RISE ABOVE THE FOG, SEZ YOU, BUT WHAT'S TO PREVENT US FROM BUMPING INTO A MOUNTAIN PEAK IN THIS KIND OF A FOG?

WHO CAN CONTROL THE WINDS OF DESTINY -

OH, BOY! IT'S DARK - WE SEEM TO BE SAILING THROUGH BLACK COTTON BATTING -

THIS INFERIOR INDIVIDUAL GAZES INTO THE FOG WITH UNCONCEALED APPREHENSION -

AFTER CRUISING FOR TWO HOURS WE ARE STILL IN THIS LUBBERLY OCEAN OF INK -

IT IS TRULY WRITTEN EVERY DAY CANNOT BE A FEAST OF LANTERNS -

GEE, WHIZ - THERE'S A STORM COMING UP -

THE LORDS OF THE UPPER AIR ARE BEGINNING TO EXPRESS THEIR HONORABLE ANGER -

MAN AND BOY - I'VE SAILED THE SEVEN SEAS FOR FORTY YEARS WITH OUT EVER SEEING SUCH A WILD STORM -

THE ENGINE IS STARTING TO MISS - WE'LL HAVE TO MAKE A LANDING AT ONCE -

HARD A-PORT! THERE'S A MOUNTAIN LOOMING UP IN FRONT OF YOU -

THIS UNWORTHY ONE BELIEVES HE SHALL SOON JOIN HIS HONORABLE ANCESTORS IN THE MIDDLE AIR -

WITH ONLY THE LIGHTNING FLASHES FOR A GUIDE LITTLE CHESTER STICKS TO HIS POST AND BRAVELY TRIES TO MAKE A LANDING AMONG THE JAGGED ROCKS THAT SEEM TO LEAP UP TO ENTRAP HIM - A VIVID FLASH OF LIGHTNING - A CRASH OF THUNDER - THEN ALL IS DARKNESS -

LE'S TRY IT.

WE'RE GOIN' TO CURE SKEEZIX'S WART'S, SKEET.

I KNOW A WAY. RUB 'EM WITH A DISHRAG AN' WHIRL IT AROUND YOUR HEAD AN' LET IT FLY AN' DON'T PICK IT UP AN' THEY'LL DROP OFF.

I CAN GET A DISH-RAG.

WHAT YOU ALL DOIN'?

GETTIN A DISHRAG TO CURE MY WARTS.

A BETTA WAY IS TAKE A STRING AN' TIE AS MANY KNOTS IN IT AS YOU GOT WARTS AN' BURY THE THE STRING AN' WHEN IT ROTS THE WARTS IS GONE.

I GOT SOME STRING.

I GOT THREE WARTS, TWO BIG ONES AND ONE LITTLE ONE.

ALL RIGHT, I'M TYIN' TWO BIG ONES AN' A LITTLE ONE.

THROW IT IN, SKEEZIX, AN I'LL COVER IT UP.

WE SEE HOW LONG IT TAKES.

GIT OUTA THE WAY, SKEET. I'M GOIN' TO MAKE BLUE SKY THIS TIME.

THEY AIN'T GONE YET.

STOP IT PAL!

PAL DUG UP THE STRING.

AW SHUCKS.

COME ON, LE'S BURY IT AGAIN.

NOPE. I DON'T WANT TO CURE 'EM. I WANT TO KEEP 'EM.
